PUMPING OUT A SCOW.

It is the easiest problem the River Man has—just take the Plug out and float.

"Nobody who knows anything about boats worries over a few feet of water in a scow if the water isn't too deep," said a river man to a New York Sun reporter. "Getting it out is the easiest job in the world." "Scows, as everybody knows, are flat bottomed, and up forward in the bottom of every one is a plug as big around as a man's two fists. Dozens of empty scows fill up with water and lie at the pier with only the deck afloat every year. It doesn't hurt them. The owner just lets them lie so till they're wanted. Then he sends a tugboat alongside and she hitches on. A man goes aboard the scow and pulls out the plug. "Does the scow sink?" "Nary a foot. As the tug starts her up you see she lifts the old scow up some, and the result is that the water in the scow pours out through the plug hole. It's hard pulling at first, but the faster the tug hauls the higher goes the scow bow and the quicker the water goes out, till the scow's almost dry. After a spin of a mile or so the plug can be replaced and the little water that remains in her pumped out by hand. "Simple? I should think so. Easiest thing in the world. That's why scows are so useful. You needn't be so extra particular about talking 'em so long as your cargo won't be hurt by water; and age and submerison seem to improve them."

A REFUGE FOR ROGUES.

Perfect Paradise for Men Who Have Committed Crimes of Every Description.

There is one corner of Central America that is at present a perfect paradise for men who have committed any crime. It is a place where the outcasts of the world's society rule the land of their adoption, and where the officials of the government protect all thieves that come to them and make it dangerous for any detective to molest them, says the London Express.

This is the republic of Honduras, one of the least advanced of the states of South or Central America. Honduras indeed is a curious mixture of jungle and gigantic forest, of coconuts and rubber trees, of bugs, snakes, and crocodiles—all in a manner of things that creep and crawl and sting and bite; a region where life in the daytime is a mockery and at night one feels as though sleeping in red pepper.

Here, in every hamlet and city, are to be found men from different lands, mostly outlaws from their own country. Chicago, Boston, New York and Philadelphia all furnish their quota. England, France, Italy and even far-away Russia have their share. They make no attempt at concealment, bear the names they were born to bear and go along about their own business as if the laws of their own country had not made them outcasts.

THE IRELAND OF TO-DAY.

More Prosperous Than Formerly, But Its Main Lack is in the Manufacturing Line.

Dr. Hon. James Bryce, a careful observer, and Mr. Seamus MacManus, the Irish writer, agree that Ireland to-day is enjoying comparative prosperity. The people are living better, their food is of a higher grade, the bank deposits have decreased, the farm rents are lower, and the returns from work are larger. The main reason why it does not take its place as one of the rich countries of the world is its lack of manufacturing. It exists mainly on its agriculture and its fisheries, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Ireland contains 32,337 square miles, not including the 196 little islands which add 246 square miles to the total. It is not quite so large as Indiana, and is a little larger than South Carolina. The Philippine islands are four times the size of all Ireland. Less than five years ago a commission appointed by parliament reported that there had been placed upon Ireland a taxation burden which it was unable to bear, and that something should be done. This came the new land act, which was a mitigation, but not a reform, of the evil.

AT THE STATE CAPITAL

Pennsylvania's Political Centre and Its Great Men.

HOPES FOR FAME ON "THE HILL"

Where the Sway of General Cameron Was Supreme for Many Years—Republican Unity and the Man to Achieve It.

Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 31.—Coming into Harrisburg one's thoughts revert, involuntarily, to the names that have been so prominently associated with the state capital of Pennsylvania in the last third of a century. Many of the men who but a few years ago were all powerful here in the political life of the state, have passed forever from the scene, and others are crowding in their footsteps. "The Hill," as the site of the capitol has been known for years, is enchanted ground. Its hopes and its tragedies would fill a great volume.

How many a young man ascended it with glowing anticipations as his eyes rested on the dome of the old state house, for the first time, while he felt his heart beat high with the promise of achievement, as senator or member of the house, only to return crestfallen at the end of the session, fully realizing the poverty of over-confidence and ambition when it is swayed by circumstance and dominated by the master-minds of politics.

Like the old man and woman, in the melodrama, who approached the lights of London with bright spirits but who, after a few minutes in the country road, bitter disappointment has been the lot of many a budding statesman who felt that he had placed his feet in fame's pathway as he took his first steps forward to ascend "The Hill." Others, firm of purpose, and unshaken in principle and integrity, have returned here with new honors again and again and some, wise in experience, still live to serve the state with ripened knowledge and a sterling manhood that has come unscathed out of the ordeal of legislative and executive responsibility.

General Cameron's Home.

Of all the men who wielded the political scepter here General Simon Cameron's memory remains the most notable. He drew men to him by a marvelous magnetism, and to his late days retained this remarkable faculty which made him a power in the noon of his prime. Passing along the river bank this afternoon I recalled the little room from which he overlooked the Susquehanna in his declining years, after his son Donald had taken his place in affairs. Here he could view the scene that first met his gaze many a year ago, when, as a poor printer boy, he first entered Harrisburg, little dreaming that he should rise to power and place not only here but in the nation. It was my pleasure to have had many a chat with the genial and kindly veteran in that little room, and to hear from him some of the unwritten history of the events in which he played a part. When General Cameron was in the zenith of his power he was indeed a political giant, and a more considerate man to those who had any party claims upon him, however slight, it would be hard to find. He was not only strong himself, but he surrounded himself by a galaxy of the strongest men in the state.

With a following of men like Quay, Tom Cooper, Bob Mackey, Chris Magee, Leoda, McManis, Martin and a host of lesser, but not less active spirits from all parts of the state, it was not easy to overcome him, or shake his influence in any conflict that might arise at the capitol of Pennsylvania.

His political captains were untiring and invincible, and partisans from all points were eager for his favor. People outside the state, however, why he held away for so many years, but those familiar with the situation knew there was no necromancy in his methods. To his personal strength he added the influence of those strong men who were as devoted as were ever the followers of the Clan Cameron in the Scottish home of his ancestors. One of the most interesting chapters in the history of this, or any other state, centers in the "Cameron dynasty," as it used to be known in those good old days, when conventions and senatorial battles used to bring the Republican hosts here from Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other parts of the state, and Harrisburg was rhythmic with the tread of marching men and gay with their banners and their bands.

But the House of Lochiel is now little more than a memory, and its surviving representative, Dop Cameron, although mentioned for governor, is said to have no ambition in that direction. This much I learn, however, namely that, he is opposed to faction and wishes to see the best traditions of the Republican party restored by the nomination of a candidate who is not a factionist and whose candidacy for the office of governor would bring together all the elements of the party in the interest of good government; one who would redeem the grand old Republican organization from the reproach of degeneracy and disintegration.

From all I can learn Colonel L. A. Watson is such a man. His valuable experience here, as state senator and lieutenant governor; his clean record; his urbane and his unflinching party loyalty, particularly qualify him for the confidence of every Republican who believes in "regularity" with decency and honor, and who is anxious for success in next year's gubernatorial campaign. I do not overstate the case when I say that the state senate was never presided over by one who so thoroughly enjoyed the confidence and respect of that body as did Lieutenant Governor Watson, whose firmness, courtesy and fairness are still remembered here and frequently referred to in flattering terms.

A Wise Constitutional Provision.

One of the wisest provisions of our state constitution, is that which restricts the governor of Pennsylvania to a single term. It declares that: "The governor shall hold his office during four years, from the third Tuesday of January next ensuing his election, and shall not be eligible for the next succeeding term." I find Republicans here who are of the opinion that this provision might well have been extended to some members of the present cabinet. The argument is that by securing the election of a member of his cabinet as his successor, a governor, who might be so minded, could virtually continue his policy for four years beyond his own term. The possibility of abuse growing out of such a condition would lie in the use of the administration machinery to promote the candidacy of some member of the governor's "official family" who might be persona grata with the chief executive of the state. It is scarcely necessary to argue that such use of the great influence of an administration would not be a whit more desirable than if it were used for the purpose of re-nominating the governor himself, since his tendency would be in direct antagonism to the spirit even if it did not violate the letter of the organic law. It would also be repugnant to the love of fairness inherent in the mass of the people who would naturally resent every such scheme, however subtle, as an attempt to create an office-holding junta. The constitution bars succession on the part of the governor and a transfer of the office, through his efforts to his attorney general, or his private secretary would be even less desirable. With most members of the Republican party of Pennsylvania "a fair field and no favor" is the correct principle. Any man who aspires ought to be able to do so on equal terms with any other man in the party, and without having to run the gauntlet of opposition from the state administration. I refer to this particularly, because since I came to Harrisburg I have heard it stated, no less than a dozen times, that the present attorney general is the "residual legatee" of the executive for the governorship. This is something new even for the practical politics of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that General Hartranft, who was a good Republican, used his second term to forward the gubernatorial ambitions of any member of his cabinet. I do not think such a thing was thought of under Governor Hoyt, or Governor Hastings, or any other governor in the memory of the present generation until now. So far as I can ascertain, it is not looked upon with favor in the present instance; because, if successful, it will establish the sinister precedent of having the chief magistrate of the commonwealth using his office to elect a successor from among his official family, and so, circumscribing the opportunities of those who are not so fortunate as to receive appointments to his cabinet.

It is undesirable thing can be accomplished now, why not four years hence; and if then, why not four years later, forward the gubernatorial term to any one of those who think it would be a good thing if the constitutional provision which prevents the governor from succeeding himself, were extended to the members of his cabinet.

The Good of the State.

The men who framed our present constitution were about the most intelligent and earnest that could possibly have been chosen for that great duty. They were straight-forward, holding rugged views of right and wrong, and determined upon safeguarding the rights of the people as well as it was possible to do so in the state charter. They felt it was not for the good of the commonwealth that a governor should succeed himself and they said so. They knew if it were possible for him to do so, he would, especially if he were more politician than statesman, devote most of first term planning as to how he could best insure his election to a second. We have had high-minded governors in the past who would scorn to stoop to such business; but this was before the era of political cunning which has invaded high places. The makers of the constitution desired to keep the office of the executive and its surroundings above and beyond the reach of compromise with evil, and so, they made the re-election of the governor, as his own immediate successor an impossibility. I am sure, had they looked a little further they might have taken equal precaution against keeping the office in the official family of the chief magistrate of the commonwealth.

I am inclined to think that it is not the wisest plan to select members of congress for our governors. Down there at Washington they seem to be getting a disregard for the state constitution which is not shared by those who receive their political training in the service of the state, and a careful observer cannot fail to have noticed something of this sort in the history of recent legislation here.

Well, here I am at the end of my letter without a word about next Tuesday's election. I am so prophetic, however, and, as the result will be known to the people of Pennsylvania before I write again, I shall let it speak for itself.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene relieved in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with asthma and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had over-looked yourself, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler, Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel, New York, Jan. 3, 1901. DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO., Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which grow from Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or other. Very truly yours, REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER, AVON SPRING, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO. Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effects of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as that of many other physicians, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can confidently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease.

Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D., Feb. 5, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO. Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.
