NEXT YEAR'S GREAT CAMPAIGN

Pelitical Prospects of Pennsylvania. What Factionalism May Lead To. Ex-Gevernor Pattleon As a Factor. The Man For Governor.

Pittsburg, Nov. 21 .- It is a long time ince Pittsburg has had any of its distinguished sons in the United States senate. Of course, the theory is that states and not special localities are ropresented in "the most dignified deliber-ative body in the world;" still it is true that there is more or less local pride involved in the matter, and that this busy, populous and progressive city would be pleased to furnish one of the two United States senators who speak for Pennsylvania at the Nation's Capital. It is still remembered here that Henry W. Oliver was the regular choice of the party for the senatorship twenty years ago, when a formidable revolt was led by Hon. Galuaha A. Grow, with a resultant deadlock that wearled out both wings of the party vietory in case a factional Republican about be nominated for governor. The excitainty of Republican success next rar reserves in the nomination for gov-ornor of a max who, though a weguin-and committeet supporter of his party and the policy, is the firm and unwav-ering advocate of unity and no far-former. That is just the top the possibilities of Mr. Paitiscu's candidacy have given these to a good deal of political specula-tion. One theory which I heard ad-ranced today will bear repetition here. It is that in case Mr. Pattison should be elected governor of the presi-mential and the policy is the firm and unwing presidential nominee of his party in 1964. As the governor of the great then the party of his thrites re-petition. The glamor of his thrites re-petition in the possibilities for the third time, he would be invincible in the Democratic National Conven-tion. The glamor of his thrites re-petition faures and carry an inspiring presidential nomine of a his thrites re-petition for the station all conven-tion. The glamor of his thrites re-petition faures and carry an inspiring presidential be most likely to carry the straining figures, and carry an inspiring presidential to the bold out the hope that the man who could achieve so mich would be nest likely to carry the strain far present likely to carry the strain far present likely to carry the strain in a presidential campaign, and if there should be a turn of the the or properity by that time who can pre-dict what might take place. This is the thought underlying Mr. Pattison's candidace, and it has the facination for spood many Democratic minds. I believe there is enough the it to give the Republican managers food for hought. But saids from this view the status. IMPORTANCE OF NEXT YEAR'S EARCHINE. victory in case a factional Republican should be nominated for governor. The lican party from end to end of the commonwealth. The man whose past record and pres-set views measure up to this high standard, and under whose administra-tion all members of the party may ex-pect fair treatment, is the man around whom to rally at this time. He is Colonel L. A. Watres, a straight-our fequilities, and no factionist, the firm advocate of unity. His name would be a certain guarantee of viciory in the state campaign, and his candidacy would leave no room for bitterness anywhere. The nomination of such a mean for governor would have the ef-fect of eliminating factionalism from next year's battle, and alding in the election of a legislature that yould make certain the elec-tion of a Republican United States ponstor. In addition to assisting large-y in electing congressmen in those districts that are in doubt as a result of the revent canvass. Along this line the battle of the ballots which they induces that which they would be and the ballots which they induces that are in doubt as a result of the revent canvass. Along this line the battle of the ballots which they is can be ballots which they is distributed the ballots which they is distributed the ballots which they is a construction of the states which they is a state of the ballots which they is a state of the state o is quite general that he will be the next
