At the state convention Wednesday Judge Pennypacker was nominated for governor over Hon. John P. Elkin on the first ballot by a vote of 206 to 152. Watres was withdrawn and he did not enter the contest. The platform declares for Roosevelt, Cuban reciprocity and an honest ballot but does not mention the state administration.

The ladies festival at the Presbyterian church last evening was well attended and netted about $20.

Mrs. Ella Huntington Clarke, who died at her home in Milford, Conn., on Wednesday, June 11, was the oldest child of Mrs. E. E. Griswold of this place. Because of the ill health of Mrs. Griswold it will be impossible for either her or Miss Griswold to attend the funeral. Mrs. Clarke is survived by her husband, a young daughter, a son aged thirteen and by her mother, six brothers and a sister.

Julius F. Huntington left yesterday to attend the funeral of his sister at Milford, Conn.

William S. McCarty, who is proprietor of the leading cafe in Bridgeport, is here for a brief visit with his aged father and mother.

A. Q. Wallace spent a couple of days in New York this week replenishing his stock of goods.

Henry and Edna Kher are home from school at Blairtown.

Miss Mary Phillips, Miss Jeanne Faure, Miss Louisa Benedict and Mr. Burwell Abichennada, a celebrated lecturer on Buddhism of Calcutta, India, were at the Dimmock House a couple of days this week.

Marriage licenses have been issued this week to Henry C. Cron and Miss Laura Howey of Delaware and Phillip N. Chamberlain of Buffalo, N. Y., and Miss Carrie W. Dewitt of Rowland.

A Jerseyman from near Sussex fell into the hands of a Port Jervis Philistine last Saturday and lost a consequence, so he alleges, some cash and certainly considerable reputation.

Miss Flora L. Travis and Julius W. Keiser, both of Dingman township, were joined in marriage at the house of the bride's father, Iru M. Travis, June 5, by Justice of the Peace John A. Fisher. The groom is a very intelligent and progressive young farmer and the bride a young lady in every way worthy of the best esteem. The Press expresses congratulations.

Presbyterian Chroniclings

(By Rev. R. M. Stussel.) The cards announcing the pastor's name, stated meetings of the church and other matters of interest to our summer guests have not all been given out. Those who expect to keep their houses open this summer for the entertainment of people who visit Milford may have one of these cards upon application to the pastor. Let those who are in any way connected with our church see to it that all Presbyterians are invited and encouraged to come to our services. This is a part of our duty as their hosts as well as collaborators together in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

It was with equal surprise and gratification that the pastor confronted his congregation last Sunday evening. The auditorium was taxed to its utmost capacity for the first time since he came to Milford and it is pleasing that the occasion suggests the general interest taken in the cause of the education of our youth. The graduating class numbers five, three boys and two girls, and although very young to be graduating still we hope good and great things from them. The baccalaureate sermon was preached from the text, Col. 1:18, marginal rendering, "That among all things he might have the preeminence." The discussion, centered about the proposition, "The Best Scholarship," accords the preeminence to Jesus in morality, morality and ministry. The graduates were throughout exhorted to make Jesus supreme over this three-fold division of their lives and if they would do this then only good could come from the use of their talents.

The pastor appeared in his gown last Sunday evening for the first time since coming to Milford. There is a great diversity of opinion upon the question of a gowned clergy in our pulpit. Doubtless there is much to be said on either side of the question. This occasion, however, called for its appearance—and it may be the result of early training—but we believe that when a gown is worn to the glory of God and not for the praise or the homage of man it is a great aid to promote the dignity, impressiveness and effectiveness of our regular church services.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers for Children's day and while Miss Elsie Mott has charge of this work for this month still others came to her assistance and have a share in the praise for the work which was so efficiently done. Certainly great taste and skill were manifested on this occasion as well as at the time of the installation. This may be tardy praise but it is as sincere as it is well deserved.

Many have spoken of the solo given by Mrs. Seeley last Sunday evening. It was most excellently rendered and deserves mention with approbation. We hope that Mrs. Seeley's solo work may continue.

It was with great pleasure that the pastor observed the presence of members of the other churches at the services last Sunday. While we never countenance or encourage in any way disloyalty to the church of our choice still there are occasions when union services are advantageous to all. In the absence of Mr. Souder we are glad to welcome his people and when a vacation period comes our congregation will enjoy the faithful and edifying ministrations of our sister denomination.

Next Sabbath services at 10.30 and 7.30. All are most cordially invited. The themes will be for the quickening, encouraging, and edifying of the worshippers.

Notes from E. S. S. Normal. Prof. Bible will go to the California state normal school this week as he is one of the board of examiners for that place.

A number of other graduates from the school will start to college next fall.

A foundation is being laid for a new recreation hall which will be a three story brick building. Webster Ellenberger has the contract.

A new grand stand has been put up on the ball ground which will make it more convenient for spectators.

The ball team played at Allentown June 7th and will go to Newton, N. J., next Saturday.

Rev. W. K. McNeil preached the baccalaureate sermon for the East Stroudsburg high school Sunday night, June 8.

Rev. H. B. Christian held services in the chapel June 10th.

A CLASS IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Continued from first page. Having awakened the wool-gathering Johnson, he returned from his predatory expedition on the only thing to take up the regular order. To Mrs. Hoggenburg's neighbor it fell to explain that Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, came into David's presence and fell upon his face. Next came Mrs. Johnson Matay's turn and she stopped fanning and stood ready.

"What did David then say?" "He said, 'Mephibosheth.'" Mrs. Johnson Matay resumed her fanning.

The Squire executed a half turn to the right and cried, "Now, Mrs. Miller."

Mrs. Miller, a very short and fat person, had just been engaged in a deep whisper with the neighbor on her left hand. She abandoned her confidences to meet the query.

"What did Mephibosheth then do?" "He answered, 'Behold thy servant.'"

Dropping her paper, Mrs. Miller turned to resume the thread of her whispering and her quondam confidence ignored her completely and sat with eyes fixed on the lesson pamphlet.

"What did the King then do, Miss Spade?" "And King David said unto him, 'Fear not.'"

"And why did King David say 'Fear not,' Mr. Hume?"

The Squire's eyes were fastened on the page through the big spectacles, but I never flinched. I knew his method now and calmly read. "For I will surely show them kindness for their father's sake and will restore."

The old man slapped his fat hand on the pew and cried, "There, there, you are getting ahead too far."

I stopped and gave him an opportunity to propound to Mrs. Elisha, "What else did he promise?"

The good woman had mislaid her spectacles and a long delay followed. My attention was divided between the thoughtful attitude of the Squire and the gradual resumption of relations between those two venerable pupils, Miss Spade and Mrs. Miller. By the time we had heard from Mrs. Elisha what else David had promised these two had entirely usurped my interest.

The apostle placed the forefinger of her left hand against the left side of her nose and seemingly pushed her head toward her neighbor. Then she whispered, "Caroline."

Mrs. Miller laid the forefinger of her right hand against the right side of her nose and moved her head closer to that of her friend.

"As I was sayin', Caroline, when the Squire interrupted, the Doctor is crazy to go."

Leaning forward a bit to look down the line of adults and see how questions were met, I caught this remark, and I stayed as I was, apparently eagerly watching the course of the lesson, in reality listening to the gossip of these two worthies.

A Good Investment. In another part of this paper will be found an extract from the recent prospectus of The Sussex Mills, now the leading industry of Sussex, N. J. The public will appreciate this investment from the fact that a large block of the bonds has already been subscribed for. The exact amount is not known, but it is rumored that one-half of the issue is already taken. The Orange County Trust Co. and the Farmers National Bank of Sussex, N. J., are the agents through which the interest is payable. The denomination of this bond is $100 each. Bonds can be registered as to principal. The capital stock is $20,000,000. The names of the officers and directors are sufficient to insure the careful and successful management of the business. We can most cheerfully recommend these bonds, which are 4 per cent bonds, payable in ten years. This is a much better rate of interest than can be procured from trust companies and savings banks. The security is ample.

Eczema

How it endures the cold, heat, wind, dust and noise! Some people call it itchy, milk crust or salt rheum.

The sufferer from it is sometimes tempted to local applications or resorted to—they mitigate, but cannot cure. It proceeds from impurities elaborated or acquired and persists until these have been removed.

Hood's Sarsaparilla positively restores them, has radically and permanently cured the worst cases, and is without an equal for all cutaneous eruptions.

Political Notes. A bill was introduced in the senate some time ago providing for the erection of a statue in Washington to the memory of John Paul Jones, but it appears to have been pigeon-holed in committee, after the manner of many bills. A statue was the other day unveiled in the park opposite the White House to attest to the splendid services in the Revolution of Marshal Rochambeau and Francis.

This was fitting; but surely it would be as much so to erect a monument, and the finest that art could produce, to John Paul Jones, the founder of the American navy, the intrepid American who bearded the British lion in his den, landed an armed force upon English soil, and spread consternation along the English coast.

The Americanism of John Paul Jones was such as to stir the patriotism in the heart of every lover of the republic to which he gave his services.

The reduction of the army by some 10,000 men will cause a revision in some of the democratic campaign orations. By the way, Mr. Bryan's military occupation of the country with a heavily armed fort near each large city, which was to result from the increase in the army, authorized by congress, following our war with Spain, does not yet seem to have materialized. Some of the Nebraska's, as well as other democratic speeches, will form subjects for some interesting talks by republicans during the coming campaign.

No man who heard President Roosevelt's speech on Memorial Day in defense of the army, and in straightforward American denunciation of the cowardly attacks which have lately been made upon our soldiers serving in the tropical Philippines, and who saw the way in which those remarks were received by the assembled throng, could fail to realize the result which would follow the attempt of any campaign orator to set the American people against the army in the Philippines now carrying out the policy of the administration in securing peace to those islands.

Peace in South Africa will bring into full production again the wonderful gold mines of that region. It was only in 1883 that gold was discovered in the Johannesburg mines. In that and the following year the output was about $50,000.

In 1898 it was about $55,000,000, since which time work has been practically suspended. The gold production of the Rand mines since their discovery has been over $300,000,000, and expert surveys show "gold in sight" amounting to $3,500,000,000. There are also many additional mines. It seems probable that South Africa will continue to be many years, as it is now, the largest gold-producing section of the world.

Senator Tillman is always cocked and primed on the "nigger question." It was very embarrassing recently when southern senators were expatiating on the alleged cruelties of American soldiers to Filipinos, to have Tillman announce defiantly that "when we get ready to put a nigger's face in the sand, we put his body there, too."

In many instances attacks of cholera morbus terminate fatally before medicine can be procured or a physician summoned. The safe way is to keep at hand a reliable medicine for use in such cases. For this purpose there is nothing so sure as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. W. E. Roseworth of Lafayette, Ala., says: "In June, 1900, I had a serious attack of cholera morbus and one dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy gave me relief in fifteen minutes." WERE FOND OF THE WEED.

Famous Men and Women Who Were Partial to the Use of Tobacco.

The effect of tobacco smoking upon the intellect has been exhaustively discussed by physicians and others, and the position taken by some that it is absurd to allege that smoking is stupefying to the faculties seems to be fortified by a mass of evidence, and in this connection it may not be amiss to consider some admitted great literary minds, says the Detroit Free Press. One of the latest to have done so was Heinrich Heine, the same droll, Balaad, Victor Hugo and Dumas did not smoke, but Alfred de Musset, Eugene Sue, Mme. de George Sand, Merimee and Paul de Saint Victor were ardent users of the weed. Spencer in the Fairy Queen calls it "divine tobacco." William Lilly, Queen Elizabeth's court poet, speaks of the "holly herb Nicotian;" Byron's name for it is "sublime tobacco;" Thackeray sings: "Meanwhile I will smoke every canister and tippie my ale in the shade." Thomas Bailey Aldrich says: "I lounge and blow white rings of smoke."

James Russell Lowell had written an ode of thanks to Charles Elliot Norton "for certain cigars," and calls it "tobacco, sacred herb." Charles Lamb was willing "for the sake, tobacco, I would do anything but die." Delightful Charles Kingsley's eulogium of smoking is well known and has been largely quoted.

Tom Hood, of the "Song of the Shirt," says: "Some sigh for this or that, my wishes don't go far. The world may wag at will. So I have my cigar."

Lord Tennyson was an inveterate smoker and so was Thomas Carlyle. The story of Tennyson calling on Carlyle one evening and sitting in solemn silence smoking for hours is well known. "Man Alfred," said Carlyle as he bowed the poet laureate out, "we have had a grand night. Come back again soon." Carlyle, like Tennyson, did not care for a cigar, but kept a pipe in his mouth most of his waking hours, and Thackeray, like Burns, loved to get away by himself and enjoy the flavor of a rank pipe.

James Payn, the novelist, cannot remember the time when he did not smoke. Mark Twain at the age of 30 used to smoke 300 cigars a month. George Augustus Sala bears emphatic testimony in favor of smoking. "The allegation," he says, "as to smoking stupefying a man's faculties, or blunting his energy, I take to be mainly nonsense."

Oliver Wendell Holmes says of the meerschaum: "He who inhales its vapors takes a thousand whiffs in a single breath; and one cannot touch it without awakening the old joys that hang around it, as the smell of flowers clings to the dresses of the daughters of the house of Farnax."

It has been said that James Russell Lowell used a number of ordinary pipes in succession and lay each aside after it had been fairly well smoked down. Later he would gather the "dottle," or, as some smokers call them, the "heels," from some half dozen of these pipes and cram them into an enormous tube and have a "real smoke," as he expressed it.

Another distinguished Harvard professor once "swore off" for six months and kept strictly to his self imposed obligation. He remarked, at the end of the time, when he resumed smoking, that his appetite had been good, he had slept well and his health generally had not suffered, "but," he said, "I lost six months of happiness, and ever afterwards he smoked like a chimney."

Both Carlyle and Tennyson smoked pipes, and Tennyson's writing desk was supplied with two boxes, one with a supply of new "church warden" and the other to receive the broken fragments of the once-smoker pipes, for he never used the same one twice, although an incessant smoker.

Harriet Martineau used to smoke big cigars on a back stool, with Wordsworth "in the gloaming" of the famous "Lake district" of England. Dickens both "snuffed" and smoked and Mrs. Blavatsky, the author of "Iris Cavelled," and the high priestess of theosophy, was a veritable cigar etc. fiend.

Curious Geographical Globe. One of the most interesting relics in the building of the Academy of Sciences at Tsarskoe-Selo.

It is a geographical globe, 11 feet in diameter, and it is made of copper. It was commenced in the year 1654 and was completed ten years later during the reign of Duke Frederick of Holstein. The outside represents the earth and the interior the celestial spheres of the world. There is a door giving access to the interior of the globe, and in the center is a round table which is so large that 12 persons can easily sit around it. By means of a curious but reliable mechanism the globe can be made to revolve upon its axis.

The curious relic weighs about three and a half tons. Ever since it was made it has been regarded as entirely unique in its way, and though its value for geographical purposes is not now very great, it is still prized by scientists as a striking evidence of the interest which was taken in geographic matters two and a half centuries ago.—N. Y. Herald.

Read it in His Newspaper. George Schaub, a well known German citizen of New Lebanon, Ohio, is a constant reader of the Dayton Volkszeitung. He knows that this paper aims to advertise only the best in its columns, and when he saw Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised therein for lame neck, he did not hesitate in buying a bottle of it for his wife, who for eight weeks had suffered with the most terrible pains in her back and could get no relief. He says, "After using the Pain Balm for a few days my wife said to me, 'I feel as though you knew,' and before using the entire contents of the bottle the unbearable pains had entirely vanished and she could again take up her household duties." He is very thankful and hopes that all suffering likewise will hear of her wonderful recovery. This valuable liniment is for sale by A. W.
