In the Painted Woods

Copyright, 1909, by Andrew Blythe.

YOUNG MASON, who lay on the couch in the parlor, ground his teeth, it was about the only thing that he could do, and cursed the road, the horse, the accident that held him a prisoner in this dense wilderness—a prisoner bandaged and aghast of his strength.

As the days passed his evil stars raze slowly to the zenith. The perfume of the vanished summer was in the fern-bed that grew knee-deep beyond the porch; the maple branches glowed red as rubies; the beech trees illumined the woods, and from behind a fallen log near by a Bob White sent his clear, exultant call. He elbowed his hands and groaned. To be free once more! To walk through the sweet-scented fern, gun cocked, eyes alert—since the time of the Pharaohs, it seemed, he had been chained to the cot.

His evil stars, that had reached the zenith, dropped suddenly below the horizon and the atmosphere was flooded with light of celestial rays. His sister's friend, she told him, as she stood on the porch, a tall, distinguished girl, she had heard of his accident; they were camped only a half-mile away; she had come hoping she might, if ever so slightly, relieve the tedium of his days.

He had heard of her social triumphs—her beauty; he had heard that men raved over her, although they said she had no soul, and in this sweet, friendly way she had come to him in his hour of need.

After that afternoon there was always a look of expectancy in young Mason's eyes turned toward the brilliant forest. He blessed the accident that had held him a willing prisoner.

The cushions on which he was propped were hers, the books were hers. She came each afternoon. She laughed with him, talked to him, read to him, sang sweet old-fashioned songs while the sun, blood red, dropped behind the mountain side, and his boy-heart swelled.

From the camp below half a dozen men came ostensibly to inquire of his health, but in reality to accompany her home, and it pleased him to see her haughty and indifferent to them— to him she was all tenderness, all friendliness and womanly gentleness.

Whimsically, as is the privilege of a sick man, it pleased him to think her a princess who came through the sunlit, painted woods, to him, an exile in pain. There were other fancies too— beautiful fancies.

One afternoon he watched for her, his brows knotted with a puzzled frown. He held an unopened letter addressed to her; a servant had found it in a lot of old rubbish.

He remembered that she had been one of the gay party that camped in the old farmhouse two summers before— it was there she had known his sister, and Boyd had been of the party.

Boyd was some ten years the senior of young Mason, and he was gratified and honored by the older man's friendship.

There was a letter in his pocket that told him Boyd was coming to share the tedium of his convalescence— would be there, that very night, in fact, and the bold, firm handwriting was the same as that on the girl's letter.

When the princess came up the steps young Mason put the letter under his pillow, and a sudden sense of peevish calmity possessed him. For a little while he would listen to her voice, hear her smile on him, and watch the gesture of her hands with their odd, foreign-looking rings. The night would bring Boyd. And afterwards? His mind didn't go any further.

"They touched on many subjects and he brought the conversation around to the mountain-party that had camped under the shadow of the great hills two summers before.

"Have you seen Boyd since his return from the west?" he asked, abruptly.

"No," said the princess. "He has found other interests since he went west and has dropped the old friends— but I scarcely class you much." There was an odd little chill in her voice.

"Oh," with a breath of relief, "I thought—I thought—"

The princess threw back her head defiantly and looked at him through half-closed lids. "One's friends are as good," she said, "they think for them, and thus simplify life." She laughed—a laugh that held no heart, no mirth.

"I was right, then?" His lips trembled in a way that would have gone to her heart if she had loved him.

He drew the letter from under the pillow and handed it to her silently. He seemed not to see the color, a warm, sunny wave, that swept her face and left it still and white.

When she had read the letter she looked not at him, but at the mountain side in front of them purple with the sunset lights.

OVERZEAL OF YOUTH.

Rebuke of Lord Lyons to Sir Edward Malet for His haste in Writing a Draft.

The self-confidence of youth in business matters often requires a necessary check. Sir Edward Malet writes in "Shifting Scenes" an incident wherein he was very properly rebuked by his chief in the diplomatic service, Lord Lyons.

While we were at Washington, says Sir Edward, the head of the chancery gave me a letter to which an answer had to be written, and told me to draft it. I dashed off what I thought would do, trying to make it as short as possible, and it went down for approval.

In due time the box came back, the head of the chancery unlocked it, took out the bundle of drafts, and presently stalked angrily to my desk, holding my luckless effusion between his finger and thumb. My writing was stroked through from end to end, and under-nath was written: "Brevity is the soul of wit, but I object to absolute nonsense.—L."

I was deeply hurt, but the lesson sank in, and I never again "dash off" a draft.

At another time the cock-sureness of youth came under Lord Lyons's displeasure. Allusion was made one day to the assault on Marshal Haynau, the Austrian general who was reputed to have flogged women during the Hungarian rebellion. He was brutally attacked in 1850 in London by brewers' draymen and brutally beaten.

The subject was talked about at dinner, and one of the young secretaries took the part of the draymen on the plea of "crowd him right."

Lord Lyons struck in quietly, "Do not attempt," he said, "to find an excuse for an act which was a national disgrace."

Defends Ragtime Music.
"They should never suppress ragtime music," said Mme. Emma Nevada, the singer, when she returned from Europe the other day. "Ragtime music is all right. Some of the songs are pretty and deserve to be let live, besides ragtime is popular and the people want it." Mme. Nevada has been away two years and has sung in nearly every large city in England and on the continent since just she appeared before an American audience.

WHY WAS ALL TENDERNESS.

There was a sudden wistfulness in her face, as she said: "And if you never find her, Jack, life must go on and on without her." In a flash she was gone.

Young Mason lay quite still. His eyes were fixed on the wood for, down the painted aisle lighted by beech trees like gigantic lanterns, with sweet, wet eyes downcast, and lips a-quiver, his princess, all unconscious of the happiness that was so soon to overtake her, walked slowly.

The hush of twilight fell on the scene. The great spaces above were filled with colorless clouds that suddenly, wave on wave, blushed pink as the heart of a seashell. Young Mason, awaiting a man's delayed greeting, choked back the sob in his throat—he was only a boy, remember, and with brave eyes smiled down into the wood, now enshaded.

BRINGS SUMMER BOARDERS.

Large Metropolitan Newspaper
Which is Helping the Summer Resorts.

The Brooklyn Eagle several years ago established a Bureau of Information in Brooklyn, where the public could, free of charge, secure details of hotels and boarding houses for the summer. The idea at once became popular, and branch bureaus were opened in Manhattan and other cities. Country hotels and boarding houses by sending to this Bureau can secure a listing blank, fill it out and return it and then be represented free of cost, and send their circulars and cards for free distribution.

The Brooklyn Eagle has also been considered for years the best medium for summer boarders in New York city.

The Rock Point Inn, in the Adirondacks, said: "We are giving the Eagle a larger share of advertising than most other papers, as experience has demonstrated its value to us in past seasons."

Chasney B. Newirk of Wurtsboro, Sullivan county, said: "Last season one small adv. brought me five guests."

La Rue Bros., proprietors of the American Hotel of Sharon Springs, N. Y., wrote: "Our house is full and mostly by Brooklyn people. Daily we receive applications for rooms, and all on account of our standing ad in the Eagle."

Snow Displaces.
Sixty degrees below zero is the bright, cold and numbing in which Arabian gold hunters must often work. They make snowplaces of snow in that domain region. The snow is pressed into blocks like bricks and a fireplace two or three feet square is built with them. When the fire is lighted the snow, of course, melts on the surface; but when the fire is out this freezes so hard that the next fire causes it to become only damp. A snow fireplace used only for cooking purposes will last for an entire winter.

Interesting To Asthma Sufferers.

Daniel Banta of Otterville, Iowa, writes, "I have had asthma for three or four years and have tried about all the cough and asthma cures in the market and have received treatment from physicians in New York and other cities but got very little benefit until I tried Foley's Honey and Tar which gave me immediate relief and I will never be without in my house. I sincerely recommend it to all." Sold at Armstrong's drug store.

CHARLES LATTIMORE, P. M.

Was Wasting Away.

The following letter from Robert R. Watts of Salem, Mo., is instructive. "I have been troubled with kidney disease for the last five years. I lost flesh and never felt well and doctored with leading physicians and tried all remedies suggested without relief. Finally I tried Foley's Kidney Cure and less than two bottles completely cured me and I am now sound and well." Sold at Armstrong's drug store.

Kurt Rudolph Sternberg, general manager of the Doornick Brewing company of Port Jervis, was in town this week. He states that the business of the company is satisfactory and that the goods are winning their way to popularity strictly on their merits. The increase in sales is marked and for a new plant only in its second year of operation the product is deservedly received with marked favor by the public.

Ten Years in Bed.

R. A. Gray, J. P., Oakville, Ind., writes, "For ten years I was confined to my bed with disease of the kidneys. It was so severe that I could not move part of the time. I consulted the very best medical skill available but could get no relief until Foley's Kidney Cure was recommended to me. It has been a Godsend to me." Sold at Armstrong's drug store.

An anti-corset decree has been issued by the minister of education in Saxony, who believes tight lacing to be fatal to intellectual development, and no girl wearing a corset may attend the public educational institutions.—Am. Med.

Warning.

During the summer kidney irregularities are often caused by excessive drinking for being overheated. Attend to the kidneys at once by using Foley's Kidney Cure. Sold at Armstrong's drug store.

Congressman Howard Mutchler of this district was an ardent Kerr man at the democratic convention.

Chronic bronchial troubles and summer coughs can be quickly relieved and cured by Foley's Honey and Tar. Sold at Armstrong's drug store.

Both the Pennsylvania and New York Central now have 20-hour trains between New York and Chicago.
