A Passage in the Life of an Honest Man. By HOWARD FIELDING. (Copyrighted by Daily Story Pub. Co.) GEORGE was a thief, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Half an hour earlier he had been merely an imprudent young man who had neglected a matter of $25 borrowed by him from "cash."

George merely bowed. He could not speak aloud. All his faculty of language was occupied in interior monologue cursing himself for his ineredible folly. His intellect refused to credit his memory; it was impossible that he was the man who had stolen $25 for a suit of clothes—at the cost of his whole future.

George had his hand upon the lid of his desk to pull it down. With or without an excuse he must go out and find that money. It was impossible that he should wreck his life, destroy his prospects just as they were beginning to be so bright, and break his father's heart with shame—all for a sum not much greater than his wages for a week.

of dishonesty should be placed upon him. He could fancy the look of disgust in Harriman's eyes when he should learn that far once he had been mistaken and that the man in whom he had reposed such flattering confidence was in reality a thief. Surely to no such man would be confided the weighty and confidential work at Johnstown; rather, the prisoner's block and the jail for him.

George had been in the great man's presence often, during the past year, than any other minor employe in the main office. He was an object of envy on that account. Harriman had intrusted to him certain portions of the correspondence with the chiefs of the smaller agencies throughout the country, and had frequently revealed the young man's suggestions with favor. George admired him; he believed he was the greatest business genius between the two oceans; and had accepted his favor as the highest blessing in the gift of Providence.

George's brain made five hundred rapid revolutions in his head. Could this mean that Harriman had been told of his dishonesty and would forgive him if he confessed? Probably; and if he could have found a voice, he would have begged for mercy. "Ninety-nine clerks in a hundred," Harriman continued, "will always be jerks. I believe that you are the hundredth man. You've been handling some correspondence with the agents—under my direction—and you have shown a comprehension of the subject that has made me think well of you."

George merely bowed. He could not speak aloud. All his faculty of language was occupied in interior monologue cursing himself for his ineredible folly. NICKNAMES OUT OF STYLES. It is Now Counted Almost a Crime to Call Even an Intimate Friend by One. The present fashion of using the full Christian names of persons young or old, when addressing them, instead of a nickname, as used to be the rule, is a more sensible thing to do than fashion usually prescribes, but why it should be counted a crime for an intimate friend, to revert to the old nickname, it is hard to understand.

Death Sentenced by Cholera. That cat can spread both scarlet fever and diphtheria among humans has been a well-settled fact for some time, and now it is thought that chickens are often responsible for the presence of diphtheria. In North Wales, England, it has been observed that several outbreaks of that disease immediately followed an epidemic of "roup," which is a fatal chicken disease.—N. Y. Sun.

TRUTH APPARENT. GLOVES. Special Sale. Mrs. Avoidupois (to small man who who is hurrying)—Stop pushing me, sir! You needn't think you can push me because I haven't an escort.—Chicago Daily News.

Excused. I've been kissing our cook. While nobody was looking. Of you needn't be shocked. For my wife does our cooking.—Philadelphia Record.

No Chance for Economy. For a moment the father regarded the suitor thoughtfully. "If I refuse my consent," he said, at last, "I suppose you will elope." "We have no such intention," returned the suitor, frankly. "You haven't?" returned the father, seemingly strangely disconcerted. "No, sir." "No likelihood of an elopement?" "None at all." "In that case," said the father with a sigh, "I suppose I will have to stand the expense of a wedding. Take her, my boy—take her."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Wary. "No," said Miss Cayenne, "I couldn't think of marrying him." "Why not?" "He is a dentist." "Dentistry is a very lucrative and highly esteemed profession." "Yes; but he would have the right to insist on filling my teeth. Foley's gives any one such a deadly advantage in an argument!"—Washington Star.

Cured Hemorrhages of the Lungs. "Several years since my lungs were so badly affected that I had many hemorrhages," writes A. M. Ake of Wood, Ind. "I took treatment with several physicians without any benefit. I then started to take Foley's Honey and Tar and my lungs are now as sound as a bell. I recommend it in advanced stages of lung trouble." Sold at Armstrong's drug store.
