But he had seen her eyes.

He san down at the table and looked at the page he had been reading last looked at it until the afternoon had wanted and night had set in. It is a singular fact that while the eyes of the body can go patiently reading lines and paragraphs and pages of learned treathers, the eyes of the mind can be looking steadily at a gray-eyed girl with her fingers twined together in her lap. True, here is this investigation carried on successfully to this luteresting point; but why was it that she want away so sport? and her eyes now why should there have been tears there?
And she would go away and marry
the rich man-he had advised it.
Well, why should it concern him?

The doctor suddenly arose, leaving his books scattered on the table, and went out into the street for airhis office was maniferable. Where he was going he did not know. He was not conscious of any resolution until he found himself in the door of Miss Willoughby's little sitting-room, and a girl with a very pale face rose up from the chair before the fire. Her eyes were wide with fear—what was he going to suy? What had he

"I was forced to come," he said humbly. "I know you will be angry perhaps you will be amused at the fact that I-s poor student, a physician who has his thoughts on you, when you have an opportunity to make a wealthy and distinguished marriage. I knew at the first that there was no hope-yet I felt that I must come. It only remains for you benefit from any medicine until I to tell me so, yourself, and then I tried Foley's Kidney Cure. After using two bottles, I am cured."

No. It was a mistake about her having been pale; for when she leaned on the mantel with her face turned to the fire she was as rosy as the morn.

"You are too considerate to tell me outright," he said; "but I see what must be. Of course it is insans the idea that you could take he remarked, professionally. "No fe-ver, I hope." And he bent forward and proverty, and the struggle for life with me, when wealth and ease are offered you. It would not be possible, unless you loved me so devotedly that your love would set all other considerations aside-"

He paused and gazed at her mis ably; and without turning she half whispered a faint suggestion. "I-I might learn," she said.

He turned white and leaned against he table for support, "Learn-learn to love me?" he taked, in a daze. "It is impossible."
"It will be difficult—but I am willing to try," said the arch-hypocrite with the gray eyes. When he went back to the office, everal hours later, with the step of one who walks on air, he found a number of books scattered in most

"Really, John is growing insupportable," he said to himself. "All these books lying around—but I remember now. I was studying about—oh, yes diphtherin. Well, there's plenty of time for that."
