A woman's scream roused me from my thoughts as I strade up the nar-row side street that led to my humble lodgings. It seemed to come from an alley close at hand, yet when I searched its depths with eyes and cars it was as silent as the grave. Twas a dark hole and prudence whispered to let the adventure pass. Yet I knew, though I knew not how I knew, that it was a good woman who had acreamed and no greature of the streets. So, with drawn sword, I tipned into the darkness till I saw a
