SOFT WORDS OF BEGGARS.

By Which They Seek to Turn Away the Wrath of Those Who Retuse Them Alms.

In the severity of a Chleago winter the able-bodied Chicago beggar has a certain temerity that deserts him as the mercury column rises to the lighlty of a July day, says the Trib-nne. With the mercury ten degrees below zero it is not an uncommon thing for a street beggar to curse an unwilling citizen to such an extent that a policeman takes him to the station in a patrol wagon. In these warm days, however, the able-bodied man who wants a "little assistance" has taken a new tack.

A prosperous-looking eltizen stood in La Salle street the other day at noon when a busky fellow lounged up to bim and asked in the well-known

"Mister, could you give me a little assistance. I-" "No, sir," was the emphatic response. "I wouldn't give my great-grandmorker a bite of bread if she was wice as thirsty as you are at this

"Thank you, sir: thank you, sir I'm much obliged to you," was the humble reply to the tirade. "I-" "O, don't mention it." returned the nation citizen; "you can't pawn it. I've got it were.

Gen. Forwood who received a report from Lieut. Jere B. Clayton, as sistant surgeon, concerning the dis-tribution of medical supplies to the people of the West Indies suffering from the effects of the recent volcanic eruptions, says that, as near as could be ascertained, the cause of death was the explosion of an inflammable gas which was emitted by the moun-tain, reports a Washington exchange. The most plausible explanation of the conditions found, he says, was given by Lleut. John J. Reilly, a member of the expedition, who suggested that the gas as sent forth by the mountain was not inflammable until mixed with a certain quantity of oxygen, and that mixture was reached at the time the gas arrived at St. Pierre. It was firmy asserted by all the survivors that everyone in St. Pierre was dead three ninutes after the explosion took

The medical journals declare that to ride in an automobile at full speed is an excellent tonic.
