There were 6,500,000 colored persons in the United States in 1980, 7,500,000 in 1890, and 8.800,000 In 1000. A "general novement" of colored inhabitants from one state to another or from one section of the country to another, due to economic, political or bygienic reasons, has been declared to be in progress at intervals of two or three years since the close of the civil war.

But the figures of each snowseding census prove that the colored jopula-tion of the United States is by no means migratoret it changes.
