In a Carefully Prepared Article recommends Dr. D. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

In a recent issue of the New York Magazine of Sanitation and Hygiene, the recognized authority on all matters pertaining to health, James H. Montgomery, M. D., says editorially:

"After a careful investigation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, a specific for kidney, liver and bladder troubles, rheumatism, dyspepsia and constipation with its attendant ills, we are free to confess that a more meritorious medicine has never come under the examination of the chemical and medical experts of the New York Magazine of Sanitation and Hygiene. In fact, after the most searching tests and rigid inquiry into the record of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, it becomes a duty to recommend its use in unequivocal terms to every reader of this journal whose complaint comes within the list of ailments which this remedy is advertised to cure. We have obtained such overwhelming proof of the efficacy of this specific—have so satisfactorily demonstrated its curative powers through personal experiments—that a care for the interests of our readers leads us to call attention to its great value."

Spanish War Pensioners

The commissioner of pensions reports that up to date 23 per cent of the Spanish War pensioners have applied for pensions. Of these 9,881 soldiers have been allowed pensions, as have also 3,160 widows and dependents. Claims numbering 18,188 have been rejected and 34,000 are still pending. These appear like rather large figures for what may be considered a small war, but the conditions were unusual. Not ten per cent of men who have lain out in the trenches and have been otherwise subjected to exposure during the rainy season in the tropics and injured their health and vitality and in many cases received disabilities which they never received entirely overcome. Of course many of these may not be pensionable under the law, but army service in a tropical country where the conditions were not understood and it was impossible to make provision against, is an entirely different matter from army service on the plains, or in a temperate climate.

The exportation of manufactures has reached the highwater mark; in April they were in round numbers $10,000,000 and this against $16,000,000 in 1898 when we had in operation the democratic idea of "free raw material."

FITTED FOR ANY POSITION.

Most Versatile of Men Who Claim to Be Possessed of Many Qualifications.

Who, next, of course, to the German Emperor, is the most versatile man in the world? We should judge that the American who has recently applied to the United States civil service commission for a post as draughtsman in the engineer service must come pretty near deserving the title, says the London Chronicle. Here is his list of qualifications:

Surveyor, draughtsman (topographical, architectural and engineering), writer for newspapers and magazines, bridge carpenter, house carpenter, boatbuilder, blacksmith's helper, boiler-maker's helper, farm hand, hunted game and ducks for market, photographer, lumberman, lecturer, shoveler on railroad grades, dishwasher, shingle, cowboy, teamster, brick shipper, solicitor, cleaned old, cracks, wood-shopper, worked in sawmills and factories, rafted logs, wrote advertising, etc., etc. Can command salary at more different kinds of labor than any living man. Immune from malarial fever, mountain fever, lary fever or any other disease. Expert on matters relating to physical or mental development. At present writing a series of articles for a New York magazine. Not afraid of heat or cold exposure. Not a friend of wild animals, microbes, men, political parties or work. Can swim any river in the United States. Expert with shotgun, can also shoot rifle. Can endure fatigue and exposure. Can handle gangs of men.

NEW ZEALAND M. P.'S.

Smart Members of the Present Age Vastly Improved Over Their Predecessors.

The name of one of the four Maori M. P.'s just elected in New Zealand revives historical reminiscences. He is one Hone Heke. Nearly 80 years ago there was a great fighting Maori chief by that name, a fanatical opponent of the British colonization of New Zealand. On one occasion he literally drove the British into the sea, capturing a fortified settlement and compelling military and civilians alike to take refuge on ships in the harbor. The British soldiers roughly Anglified his name into "John Heke" and hence across a legend that he was really an Irishman in the guise of a Maori.

The Maori M. P.'s are now a superior and well-educated class, says the London Chronicle. Their predecessors of the 60's and 70's were decidedly unconventional and primitive in their tastes and habits. It was not unusual to see one of them stroll into the house with a section of a shark protruding from his pocket, and judging from the exodus of white members in his vicinity the shark had not recently been caught. As they know only their own language, each sentence of their speeches had to be translated by an official interpreter, and this was a dreary business.

DRUIDESSES OF PARIS.

An Order Composed of Women Who March by Moonlight and Sing in the Forest.

Paris has always been a seat of all sorts of curious orders, sects and confraternities, and idolatry is probably represented in the "City of Light." The newest in the line is the "Order of Druidesses," founded by a number of ladies, who seem to purpose the revival of the old Celtic mysteries and ceremonies to a remarkable extent. The movement originated with two Parisianes who, when they are not wearing the long, flowing white robes of their order, dress in the most ravishing twentieth century manner. The Druidesses have also Druids, who accompany them to the forest of Fontainebleau, there to celebrate their rites. At the end of each month Druids, and especially Druidesses, march by moonlight, when there is moonlight through the forest, singing hymns to nature and addressing poetic invocations to the moon, the rocks, the streams and the trees. On the last night of December the Druidesses and their friends went to Fontainebleau forest, there to pluck the mistletoe, or, rather, to bring it down with golden hillocks. The sacred plant was carefully gathered, all present singing hymns in its praise.

Nevel Beauty Show at Milan.

Some time ago a beauty show was organized at Milan, which was well patronized, and 23 young ladies were judged to be the standard of beauty, which entitled them to prize winners. But no prizes were forthcoming until the other day, when an announcement was made by the promoters of the show that they had now opened a lottery for men only, the condition being that the drawer of the winning number marry one of the prize winners in the beauty show, who would in turn receive a proportionate share of the proceeds of the beauty show as a dowry. If there are no marriages the promoters are to have the proceeds of both shows.

Sleep in Church.

Hitherto it has been considered a moral weakness to slumber in church. Now Dr. Dabbs, the editor of Vectis, comes to the rescue of the church sleepers with scientific facts. "You call it trevelence to sleep in church! Nonsense! It is only carbonic dioxide." The really irreligious person is he who permits the church to be full of this foul air.

FROM THE WINDOW.

BY JOHN H. BASTYEN.

Alexander Hamilton Ponder was his name—a good one, it must seem, for a thoughtful, ambitious and high-minded young lawyer. He was still drawing on the old man back in the farm for his weekly allowance of 50, and on his imagination for encouragement in the deepest belief that the law was not overdone as a profession, and that a Hamilton Ponder, was destined to fill a high, wide place in the legal and forensic history of Chicago.

His office was a well-off corner on the eighth floor of the Blackstone building, and for the use he paid, with desultory services as copyist, messenger boy, correspondent and "assistant" to an elderly attorney of great fame and no wealth, who seldom visited through windows, except when any conditions, considered either the necessity or the desirability of having the office swept or garnished. Mr. Ponder, who spent much of his time walking around the loop district, was a neat and clean-looking man under his arm "for appearance sake," often felt like washing the windows himself, but having a high and due regard for professional dignity, was loath to appear in public in a capacity of a janitor.

But one bright autumn day, having subconsciously applied the end of his duty Prince Albert to the grimy window, he was both pleased and fascinated with the cheerful, unobtrusive prospect which this small outlook offered him. He stared for awhile across the street at the clear and glittering windows of the well-kept building opposite. Then, with vague yearnings and a sense of his own lucid, manly, political and social views, he stepped out onto the "size up" several sprightly stenographers who, perched upon chairs at many office windows, seemed to be wallowing enough briefs of too enough typewriters to measure the moon's disc and to be a tyro in the profession. From contemplation of the vast possibilities indicated by this industry on the part of so many stenographers, he drifted—naturally, I think—into a study of their personalities.

This line of investigation led his eyes as well as his mind from the farthest and most remote windows of the opposite building to the window directly opposite his own, and here, he decided, sat the flower of the flock, the ideal lawyer's stenographer—perhaps, who knows, the personification of all his romantic dreams.

Her hair was brown, or was it red? His window was just quite murky, but he preferred to call it red, because he was fresh from the country and didn't know the prevailing styles. She wore a fluffy white waist which he divined to be made of some soft, middle-weight fabric, probably to keep her sleeves from soiling. Her shapely white hands literally flew over the keyboard. Sometimes when the man in the adjoining office came in to do his duty, he would see a member of Ponder could see her turn her face toward her employer, and wondered in a vaguely jealous way if she were smiling at him. Often in pauses of her work she would turn her eyes toward him, as if looking at the sky, and the young lawyer, unobserved, gazing through the dim window of his squalid office, saw that she was very pretty, and that her eyes were very large and blue. As that by steadily gazing at her he managed to keep the window fairly clean, and often he caught himself vainly hoping that she would see him, that she would divine the piteous loneliness of his lot and—well, he didn't exactly hope she would smile at him, but he was conscious of a yearning fancy that she might let fall upon his pale, anxious face some gleam of pity, some glance of interest, some sweet but benevolent rebuke that he knew he was there and pitied him. Of course she didn't, but the hope sustained him, kept him indoors, and at last became a mild but strangely fascinating man with him. He was watching her every conceivable expression; he began to fancy that her employer was a tyrant and longed for the day when he himself could afford a stenographer. He planned how he could get her away from her present employer, and how he would treat her, and, in vague but exalted day dreams, let himself into an elaborate romance in which she was the presiding genius, the guiding star, and from which there was only one mode of exit—marriage.

One day, arriving at his dismal hole an hour late, Ponder saw his divinity in tears. At least her usually white and patrician face was now a ghastly red, and he was blue—blue—blue. "The wretch," growled Ponder to himself, and shook his fist at the back of the man in the opposite office. "The villain has been rude to her! If I only had a by a throat!" At all that day Ponder watched till he was convinced at last that the fair creature in the office on the eighth floor opposite was mysteriously in the clutches of a villain who maltreated her. He watched her with every conceivable expression; he began to fancy that her employer was a tyrant and longed for the day when he himself could afford a stenographer. He planned how he could get her away from her present employer, and how he would treat her, and, in vague but exalted day dreams, let himself into an elaborate romance in which she was the presiding genius, the guiding star, and from which there was only one mode of exit—marriage.

ELECTRICAL NOTES.

It is said that a company is soon to attempt the sending of wireless telegraphic messages from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mix 13 per cent of manganese with steel, and the alloy becomes practically non-magnetic. Nickel and aluminum steel alloys are, on the other hand, more magnetic than ordinary steel.

According to a dispatch to a London paper, the electrical equipment in use at the Indian Durbar at Delhi was the largest temporary plant ever erected. There were 90 tons of overhead cables and 50 tons of buried lines.

A vacuum tube of any length up to six feet in which mercury vapor is raised to high incandescence, constitutes the Cooper Hewitt electric lamp. The light is curious and unusual, being of a vivid violet hue almost completely free from red rays, and its effects are useful for domestic use, although it is claimed to have advantages for many purposes.

It is stated to require only a seventh as much electric energy as the ordinary glow lamp, while it has run continuously without renewal for 300 days of ten hours each.

MEN AND AFFAIRS.

Stewart Cutler, the Brooklyn institute expert, states in a current magazine article that America was not populated from Asia, but the reverse.

When the proposed royal residence at Posen, for which Emperor William has just asked a grant, is completed, he will have 25 castles and lordly dwellings in Prussia and other parts of Germany.

Lawrence McAlpin, of Philadelphia, has just celebrated his one hundredth birthday. He was born in Ireland and laid the first rail on the Madison & Indianaapolis railroad. He has had 11 children. He lost track of four of them—two sons and two daughters—several years ago, but thinks they are now living in Canada.

A daughter of the famous Sioux chief, American Horse, has applied to the Indian bureau in Washington for a position as matron or any similar place in the Indian school service. She is a graduate of the Carlisle Indian school and looks every inch the daughter of a noble red man, as indeed she ought to be, for veterans of the regular army regard her father as the finest living specimen of the American Indian.

Joseph Girouard, of Spencer, Mass., has grown weary of his debtors who cannot afford to pay him what they owe, and the other day announced that he would give receipts in full to all who applied, provided the debtors would aver they were unable to meet their obligations. "No matter whether it is ten dollars or $100 or $1,000," he declared, "any man who says he cannot pay it shall have a receipt. I want to feel kindly toward all the people, and not have them burdened with any debts to me." Mr. Girouard is a French-Canadian, who made a fortune in the livery business and afterward built up a fine trade in importing Canadian horses, bringing in about 10,000 during his career in that line.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Preparations are being made for taking a census of the Transvaal at the end of the year in connection with a census scheme for the whole of South Africa.

Of the 161 original members of the Alpine club, founded in 1851, 13 are still living, among them Mr. Justice Wills, Sir Leslie Stephen and the master of Trinity, Dr. Butler.

Kenneth Legourez, principal author of "Adrienne Lecouvreur," has completed his sixty-sixth year, and has been forty-eight years a member of the French academy. He is still writing, goes up and down his three flights of stairs daily, and takes his exercise in fencing at a "sofie d'armes."

Vandals have been at work again at Hampton court. When the portraits of William III. and Henry VIII. were injured some weeks ago, it was guessed that resentment against the monarchs justified the act, but recently a piece of old Flemish tapestry in the "horn room" was slashed across the middle.

A study of the vibrations of gun barrels has been made by two German physicists. Several military rifles of different caliber were used, being either held on cork supports or in the usual way, and the shadow of a projecting wire was photographed, with that of a vibrating tuning fork, on a moving film. An electric contact recorded the exact instant at which the projectile left the barrel. It was found that the vibrations are elliptical, that with no caliber larger than six millimeters (one-quarter inch) were the vibrations delayed until the bullet had left the muzzle, that a right-handed breech caused a slight deviation to the right, and a left-handed breech to the left, and the bayonet altered the phase of the vibration at the instant of the bullets leaving the muzzle.
