

JUDGE GLANGY

Of Hornellville, N. Y., Hands Down an Important Decision

Judge James H. Glancy of Hornellville, N. Y., and one of the most prominent members of the bar in that historic town, decided recently that as against Blood and Liver trouble, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was worthy of the highest praise. He says:

"I have used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and strongly recommend it for its good effect in my case for liver trouble and blood disorder. It built me right up and I improved greatly in health."

Geo. H. Tift of 878 River street, Troy, N. Y., suffered from liver trouble and his blood was all out of order and after using "Favorite Remedy," has this to say:

"For any one suffering from that run down or tired out feeling, caused by blood or liver trouble, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine you can buy. I have used it and I know."

The one sure cure for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder and blood, rheumatism, dyspepsia and chronic constipation, is Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

It matters not how sick you are, how long you have suffered, or how many physicians have failed to help you, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will cure you if a cure is possible.

It is for sale by all druggists in the NEW 50 Cent Size and the regular 1.00 size bottles—less than a cent a dose.

Sample bottle—enough for trial, free by mail. Dr. David Kennedy Corporation, Hornell, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a medicine, remove pain anywhere. Its strength.

Washington is enjoying a carnival of disclosures. In addition to Post office officials under arrest for bribery, a shortage of $75,000 has been found in the accounts of the auditor for the District of Columbia due to the peculations of a "trusted clerk."

The complacency with which the Servian people kill their king and queen and celebrate the event with fireworks would indicate that they are about on a par with some of the immigrants who have been coming to this country.

The Man Who Found Himself.

By R. Henry Matner.

JOSIAH JAMIESON was a self-made man, and it was the boast of his old age. Twenty years had elapsed since he had entered the limits of the little hamlet where lay buried the golden egg of his future success, and which as time passed some railroad official had designated as Black Rock.

In making himself Josiah Jamieson had fathered the upbringing of the town, and with the instinct of a far-seeing speculator had possessed himself of the lion's share of it. He had also founded the business which had set him above the ordinary cares of living and comfort.

His stores were very cosmopolitan in their lines of merchandise, comprising mill supplies, mining outfit, groceries, and articles of wear for the inhabitants. He also dabbled somewhat in lumber and the solitary saw-mill on the neighboring river bank was embodied in his deeds of ownership.

As his age crept upon him he realized that his interests needed the hand of one more skilled in the matter of books and figures. So it was that one bright morning found a stranger poring over the dusty ledgers, and Josiah standing idly by, puffing his pipe with the self-consciousness of a man who has known prosperity.

Besides this goodly share of worldly possessions, Josiah had an only child, a daughter, and his intentions regarding her were in accordance with what he considered his heir should require. To this end her home-training was all that a dutiful parent could devise. When she had turned 17 he sent her east, where, under the strict eye of a maiden aunt, who was to be schooled in the accomplishments necessary to a lady of culture.

The new bookkeeper had spent a half-year of work within the precincts of the little back office, and certainly he had brought remarkable order and system out of the chaos into which the affairs of the firm had drifted. This gave Josiah much satisfaction, and he had remarked to a friend in a burst of confidence, that "the fellow is a rare one at figures and very obliging to boot for an ordinary collegier."

A letter arrived at this time from his daughter, bringing the announcement that she had completed her term of education, and also a trip across to the seats of fashion in the old world, and that she was returning home for a well-earned holiday and rest. As usual, the proud father made his morning call at his office, and with forced calmness proceeded to inspect the work of his secretary, adding a few words of commendation or praise as the case demanded. Then he shifted to the main object of his visit.

"I want you to take the cart and go to the station to meet my daughter Jean, whom I am expecting on the ten o'clock train. I think the drive would do you good, and I will keep the desk until you return."

So it came about that Tom Burrows met Jean Jamieson.

Months later Tom Burrows reviewed his past with no small amount of displeasure as he sat in his room smoking his pipe of reflection. In some inexplicable manner the whole course of his life had gone wrong. He had already passed the age of 25, when, according to his opinion, every man should have the channel, into which his talents might be directed, well grooved to the accomplishment. His early days had been spent in thoughtlessness and ease; these included three years at college where he had intended to graduate a full-fledged M. D. However, circumstances often ruin plans for the future. When he suddenly discovered that it was cramping his father's waning income and also seriously hindering the chances of his younger brothers and sisters, of which he had a goodly number, he determined to utilize his abilities in a more practical and less expensive sphere. His decision had come as a severe blow to his mother, who held him, her oldest boy, as a cherished ideal, who should be a trifle better than the ordinary, no matter what the sacrifice. But so it was that he accepted the position under the worthy magnate of Black Rock. Then to think that this spring of a girl had well-nigh upset his whole career. Full well his memory pictured that morning four months before when he had driven the hourly family cart to the depot to meet this daughter of his employer, and how she had treated him with striking hauteur. She had even mistaken him for her father's coachman, and yet her very prudishness seemed but to lend a glamour of romance to her, which had caught him in a veritable web! How often she had entered the father's store, accompanied by some of the youthful professionals of the place, and seemed to delight in stringing her superiority to the common office man! Thus her pettiishness and affectations sat well upon her dainty figure, and a certain indefinable odor of perfume seemed to pervade the dinginess of the office when she entered. At times he seemed to see beyond her outward nature, and at these rare intervals he caught a momentary glimpse of a character which, if allowed to assert itself, might have endeared her to the coarsest mortal. He often noted how old Josiah watched her every move, and how the staid, old-fashioned home of the Jamiesons became the center of the fashionable home parties and afternoon teas. Then as a crowning tribute to the wretchedness, young Dr. Ames, voted by all the mothers of the district, had quite lost his heart to this coquetical little being.

Since the day of their first meeting Tom had fought down his feelings by applying himself to his desk with redoubled vigor, endeavoring to convince himself that his opinion of her was much the reverse of favorable. On this night in question he had ceased to wrestle, and upon the eve of resignation to the hand of fate he had summed the whole matter up and voted himself one of the great fools that ever lived. A square pink envelope lay unopened upon his dresser, and after arriving at this fairly satisfactory conclusion he tore off the seal and scanned the contents, although he could have guessed what it contained. It was an invitation which the youthful mistress of the Jamieson household had sent him, to spend the evening, no doubt prompted by the advice of her father. The weather had developed into one of those January blizzards which periodically sweep across the North-west prairie, almost overwhelming the town which lay within its circle, and Tom was loath to braver its fury for such a cause, and yet unconsciously he began to dress, and in time he had reached the home of his employer. To his surprise he found that but one guest besides himself had been bidden, none other than Dr. Ames, who of late had been almost a constant visitor.

Supper had been served. While Jean and the doctor conversed in low tones at one end of the long dining-room, Tom sat at the other with Mr. Jamieson and exchanged mutual condolences on the business aspect of the coming season. Yet he was not wholly indifferent to the scene before him. The little lady looked peculiarly bewitching and altogether disdained, and to his eyes she was playing her cards with the young medical man in a way which he could not but have perceived. He was apparently absorbed in his entire attention. The hour was wearing slowly toward Tom especially, and then a hurried summons at the door brought Mrs. Jamieson from the regions of the dining-room in answer. A sudden noise, as of people scurrying past, followed, and Tom realized that the call of fire had been raised. Mrs. Jamieson cried out in a frightened voice that it was the fire, and then Tom had passed her in the hallway, and was out on the street.

Already the flames, caught by the storm that howled without, were lighting up the town like a new sun. The scene of indescribable confusion which ensued could never be forgotten by those more intimately concerned. The crude fire-fighting apparatus frozen solid, refused to work, and as the red streamers wrapt about the mill and swept across the roofs of the warehouse and stores adjoining, the people knew that Josiah Jamieson's worldly possessions were doomed.

Tom, looming up in the released mizzle of a college athlete, made herculean efforts to stay the ruin. Followed by a number of men he thawed the hose, directed the stream of water, helped to throw out the goods from the store, cleared the office of its precious books and papers. In fact, storm or heat mattered little to him then, for a covering cloak, wrapped in a mighty fur-lined cloak, had looked up into his grimy face through a mist of tears and had said something. He never tarried to hear what it was, but leapt again into the battle royal.

In the early morning a smoldering heap of ashes and half-burnt woodwork alone marked the spot where Jamieson's store and mill had stood, and around it in a jumbled-up mass was the merchandise which had been saved. Only one small building which had been used as an office had missed the fury of the flames, and that was only through the gigantic efforts of the men and a fortunate veering of the wind.

Josiah Jamieson had been seized with a paralytic stroke during the destruction of his property and lay at his home with two doctors in constant attendance, and to Tom fell the task of managing this almost insupportable condition of affairs. Luckily from a quiet office-man he had assumed an air of general manager and gave his orders and went about

HATS OF CORNHUSKS.

Style of Headgear That Will Rival the Coolest Panama the Coming Summer.

Corn husks during the present season have been bought up for the purpose of utilizing them in the manufacture of a new style of hat which may become both fashionable and popular next summer, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

The material is cheap. In fact, it is usually wasted. Properly cured corn husks are tough and may be folded without cracking. Dampened, they may be made to assume any desired shape.

The process of working corn husks into hats is novel, somewhat intricate, and is protected by patent. It is said that samples already turned out are artistic as well as light and strong.

An element which enters significantly into the construction of the hat is the natural shape of the husk, which tapers in width from base to tip. When split the parts maintain this configuration, as they parallel the fiber.

This tapering of all the parts has been an important feature in the manufacture of the hat. The brim and top of the hat are formed by a series of layers of corn husks. To impart a novel appearance, the outer end of some of these layers are pointed. Considerable ingenuity has been displayed in the entire construction of the hat—even the band is made of corn husks—and it is asserted that the result is graceful and attractive, and that, though it may be considered as economically to be sold at popular prices, more expensive brands, requiring exceptional skill in the manufacture, will be turned out to meet the demand for hats at fancy prices.

ORIGIN OF "GREENHORN"

Term Used by Hunters Many Years Ago to Designate One with Alien Antlers.

The democratic plankroom of the senate held a congenial company, of whom Mr. Vest, of Missouri, was the center. There were reminiscences and witty reminiscences, the conversation eventually turning to former Senator Turpie, of Indiana. All agreed that he was a man of erudition, and someone ventured that Mr. Turpie, now residing among his own people in the Hoosier state, is one of the best informed in belles lettres of any man who ever came to the senate, says the Washington Post.

"I recall," interposed Senator Vest, "an incident along that line which demonstrates what a marvel Mr. Turpie is in his fund of information. I was once in a company where a question arose as to the origin of the term 'greenhorn.' The question went around until it reached Mr. Turpie.

"Oh, yes," observed Mr. Turpie, readily. "It is a term that was used many years ago in hunting. The word was used of deer which at certain seasons of the year live soft and green horns, and resort to muddy depressions in the landscape, where they can plunge those horns into the mud and water to cool them.

"By the deer became easy prey for the hunters, and accordingly, became known as 'greenhorns.' From that we have the use of the word as it is applied to men."

HEIRS OF JOHN HANCOCK.

Descendants of the American Patriot Put in Claims for French Spoils of Stoney.

It looks as if the "line of descent" from John Hancock of revolutionary fame might have to be run down for the purpose of determining at this late day who are his heirs-at-law, says the Boston Herald. Though the governor died about 1783, and all his estate then appraised, was administered upon by Dorothy Hancock, his widow, it has recently come to pass that his estate is entitled to some thing by virtue of a French spoliation claim, and in order to receive payment of it supplemental administration has to be taken out on his estate.

A few months ago Mr. George A. King, an attorney, upon the request of Mrs. Elizabeth T. H. Wood, upon the supposition that she was the only heir at law of the patriot, filed a petition in the Probate court for Suffolk county, asking that he be appointed administrator of the unadministered estate. It now appears that Mrs. S. Safford, of Westchester, says that she is one of John Hancock's heirs, and Albert F. Converse, her counsel, has filed an appearance in the case in opposition to the petition. The matter is pending in court, no day for the consideration of the matter having been fixed.

Little Loss in Post Office.

The post office money order department handles about $300,000,000 a year. The loss by the dishonesty and carelessness of clerks has been only $251 in the last two years, but this is partly explained by the fact that the clerks are made responsible for the money they handle, and any loss is considered theirs.
