With perfect control of the muscles you will one the hands naturally, and entirely conseal the art by which you acquired dexibility.

There are a few rules which materially aid one in the struggle for grace of movement. Drop every mannerism which the hands play an important part. Do not fuss with the bair, pull the ears, rub the nose, finger the face, play with rings or other adornments, or fiddle with any part of the wearing appared. Do not drum with the fingers, above everything, for that in the most common habit and the hardest to overcome. Bear these things in mind when alone, and you will soon find no necessity for remembering them is company.

White Negroes.

Occasionally it happens that negrous are white, but for all that they are still negroes, since they possess every characteristic, save one, of their race. Linnaeus long ago remarked that color was, after all, merely a secondary character. The negroes of which we speak are of pure stock without any admisture of white blood. A family of the nort has recently been studied in Mhadasippi, where a traveling archaeologist no ticed a number of albino negro children at work in a cotton field. Inescended from an albino grandfather who married a black woman and whose three soms were all normal and black. All the some married black women, two of them had children who were perfectly normal in respect of The third married twice. By the first wife he had six childrenfive black and one albino; by the secand he had ains children-six black and three albinon. The albinolam, therefore, skipped an entire generation, appearing only with the grandchildren of the original parent, and then only in certain cases.
