GAME OF "SNIFF."

Played with Deminos and Popular In "Sailt" is a variation of the oldfashioned game of dominos and is played in much the same way. Two, three or four persons may play the game. If four are playing R is usual for the couples sitting opposite each other to be partners. All of the dominos are placed on the table, face down. Each player turns one. The one turning the lowest number plays first. In case four are playing the two lowest are partners, unless otherwise arranged If these are four players each draws five dominos, and sets them up so that he or she only can see the numbers on them. If three are playing each draws six dominos, and if two they draw seven each. The first player "sets" whatever domino he chooses from his hand. He abould select a "double" if he has one of a suit in which he is strong. For instance, if he has the double-two, two-blank, two-five and two-six, with one other domino, he should "set" the

The first "double" played, no matter when it is played, becomes the "antiff," and is the most important domino the game, because it may be played upon on all its four sides.

A count is made whenever the total of the ends of the dominos is five, or some multiple of five. In this count only those ends of the "sniff" are counted which have been played on, except when but one side has been played on, in which case the "anis" counts its full value like any other double.

There are three objects in the game. First, to count as much as possible; second, to "go out" first, that is, play all your dominos: third, to prevent cour opponents from playing or count-

The first person to "go out," that is, to exhaust all of his or her dominos, counts the total of all of the dominos held by the others, except his or her partner. If the sum is not a multiple of five, the count is the nearest multi-If the game is "blocked," so that no

EDUCATION THAT EDUCATES.

Practical Tests Better than More Memorizing in Schools. Educators are growing fonder and and fonder of the idea of making education practical. In Brooklyn n new plan has been adopted for examinaplan has been adopted for examina-tions for graduation from high schools, and student's standing is based more integly on class work through the year and less on the resuit of closing tests. Each princips conducts examinations at his own discretion, but the emphasis is thrown upon practical ability instead of on the mere accumulation of facts. The class work will be made to turn on the power to think rather than to memor tae. The Brooklyn "Engle" says: "For instance, in languages, the ex aminations will be designed to test the pupils' power to read at sight and to translate into idiomatic English. English literature a knowledge of the bistery of literature and good taste in reading will be counted rather than knowledge of any text book. In English composition the test will be the ability to make a clear synopsis of a composition, and to srite clearly and accurately, while the long-despised and neglected spelling will be counted In science the number of experiment performed and the student's skill, fraction of a second is, therefore, of wurld-wide importance.
