The new republican campaign book will contain some cold facts and figures regarding the country's past and present prosperity and industrial productiveness during the preceding eight years of republican regime which it will be extremely difficult for democratic speakers to consider in their prospective bursts of impassioned oratory.

Judging from the low tariff oratory found in some of the democratic speeches in the Congressional Record, it will be the thing this campaign for all good democrats to get down their "Free Trade" and "Tariff for revenue only" speeches of 1893-6, dust them off carefully and fire them broadside at the terrified republicans. The free tariff speeches will be left on the top shelves to moulder yet a while longer.

Spain's formal announcement that she will not interfere with our naval demonstrations in Morocco have been received by the country with a vast breath of relief. While we are at peace with all the nations of the world, including Spain, the people have vivid recollections of the way in which our vessels were sunk by the Spanish and our army wiped off the face of the United States by the ferocious but truthful Weyler and other great Spanish commanders.

That was a great meeting of old "hays" the other day when Attorney-General Knox, announced to succeed former Senator Quay, went over from his farm at Valley Forge to the farm of President Cassatt of the Pennsylvania railroad. They were joined at dinner at the Farmers' Club by Senator Penrose, Mr. Frick of the United States Steel Corporation, Governor Penypacker, former United States Senator Cameron, Richard S. Quay, son of the late senator, and several others of the same class of "farmers."

BESSIE.

Jack Wetmore carefully checked the long line of figures before him. "It is a smash—utterly and absolutely a smash. Well, it's no good whitening—I'm done for."

Throughout the seven and twenty years of his life he had been accustomed to regard himself, and had been regarded by others, as a rich man's son. Wetmore & Wetmore had always been held above suspicion. As he sat in his comfortably furnished room he could hear the cries of the newsboys with the special editions of the evening papers.

"Further details of the Wetmore failure."

He rose from the table and pushed the papers wearily from him. Strolling from the dressing room adjoining he exchanged his smoking jacket for a dress coat and arranged his tie with a critical air.

"It is to be my last appearance," he said, "at least I'll make it as outwardly respectable as I can."

Then he frowned and looked thoughtfully at the fire, his hand unconsciously moving toward the mantelpiece till it touched a massive silver frame containing a portrait, a recent one evidently, of a particularly handsome girl.

"It's so good, Bessie—no good, my dear, I dare not speak to you now. I'm done for!"

Twenty minutes later the butler at Blansford's announced Mr. Wetmore, and after a few words with Mrs. Blansford, his hostess, he passed into the ballroom. In all the brilliant crowd there was only one face he looked for, one well-known figure for the sight of which he yearned.

At last, after wandering through several rooms, he saw her. She was sitting under a shaded lamp, apparently paying but little attention to the man who was talking to her. But the instant Mr. Wetmore passed through the door she beckoned to him.

"Come and sit here, Jack," said she, pointing to the vacant seat just left by the other man.

She regarded him with an amused little smile and a nod of approval. She was a young woman with ideas of her own, and she appreciated the light, careless manner with which he seemed to carry his misfortune.

"You don't look very doleful, Jack, under the circumstances."

"My dear Miss Blansford, do you think it would help matters if I went about looking like a mute at a funeral?"

"And pray, my dear Jack," she retorted mockingly, "since when have I become 'Miss Blansford'?"

"Since I heard the news last night," he answered grimly.

"Oh! very well, if you are going to put and quarrel with your friends just because you've lost a little money—"

"I may be a little, but unfortunately it happens to be all I've got. I owe a good deal besides."

Wetmore rose and held out his hand. He was fast losing his self-control. "I must be off, I came only to say good-by to you."

RICHARD C. LOESCH MARRIED

Julia Stull of Trenton and Miss Josephine Walls of New York, equally attractive brunettes were attired in light pink chiffon cloth, and their large bouquets were of pink sweet peas.

David Wakeman of New York city was best man. The ushers were all friends of the bridegroom, from the city.

The bride's traveling dress was of brown silk; her hat was also brown with large lightgreen feathers.

The gown of Mrs. Henderson, the bride's mother, was the subject of enthusiastic admiration. It was of pale-blue charmeuse satin under a skirt of spangled chiffon, the whole covered with silver-grey gauze which was embroidered with silver and mother-of-pearl ornaments.

The court train was fastened to the shoulders with a cape made of mother-of-pearl fringe, headed with a band of rare roses of chiffon embroidered with silver. Exquisite pearls and jeweled lace was on the skirt, bodice and sleeves. The edge of the court train was bordered with frills of the silver gauze held in place by blue butterflies with roses of chiffon above. Some very fine diamond ornaments fastened her tulle across the front of the bodice, over a fall of lovely pearl and silver gauze.

The costume of Mrs. R. C. Loesch, mother of the bridegroom, was white silk grenadine, appliqued with white chiffon embroidery finished with pale violet velvet. She wore rare diamond and pearl ornaments, and carried a bouquet of large violet orchids.

Mrs. Alfred Henderson of New York attracted especial notice in black lace elaborately embroidered with gold over white satin, further enhanced by diamonds of great brilliance.

There were many other costumes of rich material and elaborate detail in design, all contributing to the splendor of the scene.

The presents received by the bride were many in number and of great value. Her father remembered her with the liberality of paternal love, and many friends were represented by rich and beautiful gifts. Particularly noticeable were two chests of silver, one a complete outfit in artistic design; and a "grandfather's" clock with a case of elaborate workmanship.

Mr. Loesch, the bridegroom, is a young paper merchant in New York city, well known and highly respected in the trade.

The guests from abroad were: Joseph Harriman, Leo Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Birge, Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Ireton, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Gluck, Mrs. P. Heid, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Middlebrook, David G. Wakeman, Miss Richardson, Mrs. Richard C. Loesch, Miss Loesch, Miss Helen Loesch, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bull, Mr. and Mrs. T. Herbert Alton, Mr. and Mrs. T. Harrison Bopp, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. P. Sands, J. R. Herrick, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Van Nostrand, Miss Nostrand, Royal H. Fuller, Miss Marian White, Mr. and Mrs. J. Halstead, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Biddolph, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Herkness, Miss Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Cowperthwait, all of New York.

Dr. and Mrs. Bidwell, Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Brett, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cavall, Walter Eager, A. M. Kirby, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Sloan, Mr. and Mrs. Sobenck, Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Toffey, Miss Toffey and Mr. and Mrs. E. F. C. Young of Jersey City; Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Macomber of California; Mr. and Mrs. L. Stul of Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Floyd of Boston; Miss Montague of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Alain of Orange, and Miss Edna Patten of Poughkeepsie.

Mr. and Mrs. Loesch will make their home in New York after a brief honeymoon—Hackensack Republicans.

THE MOST DEADLY REPTILE.

King Cobra is the Most Dangerous of All Snakes.
Snakes—venomous snakes—may be divided into two classes, the cobras and the viperoids. The cobras, inhabitants of distant India, form a class apart. To the viperoids belong all our venomous species, including our own splendid rattler, the moccasin, the fer de lance of the West Indies and the deadly bushmaster of Venezuela and the Guianas.

Diagnostically opposite, though equally fatal, are the effects of the cobra and the viperoid poison. Diagnostically opposite, also, are the two methods of attack. The cobra at times is aggressive, the king cobra being said even to pursue man. Silent, without the least warning, and from a place where you would least suspect, the round head starts out of a thicket, a sharp pain causes you to exclaim, and the frightful fangs of the snake are buried in your flesh. Like the grip of a bulldog they hold fast while from five to ten feet of animated cable come stretching out of the thicket to coil lazily beneath the dread head.

For this eternal hold on the victim there is a natural reason. The fangs of the ten-foot cobra are but a third of an inch long. It is impossible, therefore, to squirt the venom deep in a single stroke. In order to give the venom time to absorb the snake must retain its hold. The fatal poison contains about 95 per cent. of nerve-destroying and about 5 per cent. of blood-destroying elements. Within five minutes the pain leaves the wound and even the shock of the attack begins to wear off. There is little suffering, nor will there be to the relentless end. Only if by chance the bite is one from a small snake or if a fresh supply of antitoxin happens to be at hand is there a chance for your life. If one recovers from the immediate effects within a week one is as healthy as ever. While the poison of the cobra often kills within an hour, there have been cases where the "atriki" of a rattlesnake and a bushmaster have caused death within ten minutes. Naturalists accept, however, that the king cobra, owing to its great size and the consequent quantity and quality of poison emitted, is the most dangerous of all the snakes.—McClure's.

An Andean Nation About Soroche.
On one occasion, crossing the Tabora Pass, a breast of Tams, Peru, I was severely attacked by mountain sickness at an elevation of only about 7,000 feet above sea level. It completely prostrated me, but my Indian arriero told me that "the spot was famous for soroche," the name by which mountain sickness is known to all the Aymara and Quechua people of the Andean range, and that if I would continue my journey up the Coraculera it would leave me."

The following morning I was lifted into my saddle and continued the ascent of the pass, and within two hours was nearly well again, and before I reached the summit of the pass, about 15,750 feet altitude, the soroche had entirely left me.

The Indians among the Andes have frequently told me that "soroche" is not the effect of altitude, but, as they put it, "of mineral veins." It may be that the geologist and atmospheric conditions of certain localities are to some extent the cause of it, in addition to altitude, the former being perhaps the principal factors, although imperfect digestion and constipation invite it.

During a long ride in southern Bolivia at an elevation of from 15,000 feet to 14,000 feet I noticed that, before leaving the post houses, the Indians rubbed garlic on the nose and breast of my mule. They told me that this was "to prevent soroche."—London Times.

Underground Marvels.
Particularly have been published of a wonderful series of underground caves in the Stalden district of Canton, Schwytz. The existence of these places had before been vaguely known, but they have now for the first time been fully explored by a party, which went down fully provided with 5,000 yards of rope ladders, acetylene lamps, rurs and provisions for eight days. They were underground for two full days, penetrating for a distance of 2,500 yards through vast hills brilliant with stalactite and other crystals, and with other recesses branching from them. There were also found swift subterranean torrents, powerful enough to work great industrial undertakings.—London Times.

Low Dillon and Flora Temple.
I was very much interested in your diagram on the sporting page of today's paper representing the position that various famous trotters of the past would be in if racing on the same track with Lou Dillon. With no desire to detract from Lou Dillon's record-breaking feat, I want to call your attention to the fact that Flora Temple, whom I saw in her best days, pulled an old-time "high-wheeled" sulky which weighed as much as four sulkeys of today. I feel convinced that if Lou Dillon had to pull Flora Temple's sulky, she could not least the time of the old favorite. There were great days, when horse flesh had not so many up-to-date, pneumatic-tired paraphernalia to help them make great records.—Philadelphia Press.

Worst of All Experiences
Can anything be worse than to feel that every minute will be your last? Such was the experience of Mrs. E. H. Newson, Decatur, Ala. "For three years" she writes, "I endured insufferable pain from indigestion, stomach and bowel trouble. Death seemed inevitable when doctors and all remedies failed. At length I was induced to try Electric Bitters and the result was miraculous. I improved at once and now I'm completely recovered." For liver, kidney, stomach and bowel troubles Electric Bitters is the only medicine. Only 50c. It's guaranteed by all druggists.
