The Desert Tortoise.

One of the most interesting rep-illes of California's great desert is the desert tortoise. I have found as many as twenty of these hard-shelled follows, that we usually as-sociate in our minds with the thought of water, in the very heart of the desert, where the water was of the desert, where the water was exceedingly scarce. Yet, when you pick them up, they generally void two or three large spoonfuls of liquid. Dissection shows that they bottom of each leg of each have two large water sacks on dinary door humpers, the back, and these afford them their water supply. They are great travelshould imagine; they are also good climbers. I have watched one for hours climbing up and down the rocky sides of a desert mountain. He could wiggle bimself up a rock almost as high as he was long. Raising himself on his tail end, he would use his head as a hook, then claw with his right leg until it had secured a good hold; them, with what seemed to me extraordinary strength, he would lift himself up and wiggle his body lato a secure position." Protection for Apea.

A scheme is being arranged for the protection of the manike apen in the German colonies or equatorial Africa. It is proposed in the place that the shooting of these creatures should be strictly forbidden and steps taken for their protection. In connection with this it is proposed to establish in the Cameroons a special reserve for the fauna of the equatorial forest generally. This re-serve would include a soological tropical station, with gardens at-tached, in which attention would be specially directed to the protection and rearing of the anthropoid aper and other denizens of the forest sone. The scheme would likewise include the study of the fresh water

At the reservoir at Saddleback Pond recently at Rangely, Me., beavera' work in dam construction was found to interfere with the water supply from Saddleback stream. These busy engineers had constructed a tight dam which had retained considerable of the supply of the mountain reservoir, and workmen each day tore out their work only cach day tore out their work only to find it rebuilt on their next visit. Good sized tree sections had been hauled in and placed in the dam by the beavers. After several de-structions of the heaver's dams there was again found to be a stoppage in the supply of water through the main pipes. The dam had not been
