The Choice Brenton Strang stood motionless in * docresy of his modent frame

"he donrery of his modest frame source, staring with unseeing eyes out over the blue waters of the Pacific. Less than a mile away the smoke curled upwards 'rom the fishing town of Kakiak, and far away to the east ward, across the shimmering stretches of the strait, cose in dim grandeur the glaciers and snow-clad mountains of the mainland.

Close at hand the wide fields were where the cattle grazel in blasful peace, unheeding the golden beauty of the dalaies, the apphire grace of the blue bells, and the dainty blankss of the wild roses, making a rich riot of the wild roses, making a rich root of color and perfume. For this is the warm garces of that chill north coun-try-a bit of the gracious southland that nature has transplation to these islands of the sea, and carefully surtures ... no blesses with warm ocean currents, sunny skies and soft breases. currents, sunny skies and soft breages. Strang frowned impatiently at his thoughts, and turned on the threshold. He stepped to the low carved mantel and took in his hands the photograph of a fair-faced girl. Her eyes smilled straight into his sombre ones, but still unamiling he laid the picture down and tramped restlessly back and forth the frown on his forehead down and tramped resteasiy back and forth, the frowne on his forehead growing ever deeper. He needed no visible reminder of the face Mto which he had looked that afternoon when Lolita, the daughter of the white superintendent of the canneries by his Alcut wife, had walked beside him on the shore . There had been a short, perllous moment when he had caught her in his arms to save Ler from the unsur pected quicksand that had sucked her feet downware. But in that brief instant her arms had held him tightly and he had seen in her dark eyes a strange light that told its tale of warning.

The girl was young and utterly unlearned. Her sllm, supple girlbood appealed to him, and she had become a part of the free, open-air life he had led for two years. But Brenton Strang was a true man at heart, and he faced his problem with unfinching candor.

Should 'e woo and wed the girl-baif Indian and almost wholly pagan -with her passionate love of nature in the wild northern land; should be bring her into his home which he had builded with the thought of another woman always in his heart, and so settle down to the vast farming life that opened before him? Or should he go back to civilization and to the girl whose face watched him from the simple gold frame? She belonged to the life behind him, her dainty, aimost fragile beauty found its rightful setting in the luxury to which she had been born. And yet! There had been a time-two short weeks of camp life-when they had lived very near to the heart of the world, and the cays had glided by in the deep and true channels of life. He looked around his empty home, ricturing her there, as he had so often done. Not until this hour had he realized how closely he had wrought the thought of her into his life. Three months before he had written her of his decision to remain per-manently at Kadiak, save for an occasional winter in the South. The old life which they had known togethsr had lost its grip upon him, and the new, broader, samer life held him fast. He needed her and so he had told her.

at the same time leaving her free to Weeks had passed and no word had veens and passed and no word had come, and his heart and ..ome were very lonely. Lollta's youth charmed and tempted him, but the love of the other woman still filled his soul.

Dolly Heath walked quickly up and down the pretty room, bilnd to its beauties, and usaf to the telephone bell ringing furiously in the hall. Her eyes were full of tears of anger as she minicked. "I won't be at home very Any light wooden or very firm card-board box may be used for the foundation; it should be carefully lined with wadded silk or sateen, the autor to sight, dear, so con't walt up for me, will you?" "How much how much he must love me! Love, in-deed, but I suppose after one has been married for two years she should edges of which may be drawn on to the outside and fixed by mucilage, then cover the sides with silk, or if begin to expect her husband's love to grow cool. Love! I don't believe be in capable of Lva. I don't think he ever loved me anyway. It was prob-ably because I was good looking that preferred, art linen might be used. he married me. Why, to-night is the second time this week that he is going to leave me alone, and last week hi was out two nights, too." She dropped onto a convenient couch and crice her anger turning to sorrow at the terrible calamity soon to befail her. Aiready she saw herself left alone for life, to die of sorrow, by her wicked husband, who if she had but known it, was at that very moment buying a beautiful collidog for her. Dolly set out for a long walk to think the mater over calmiy The cool wind refreshed her, and she started out, deciding to walk to the coast about two miles from her oottse

Two nights a week! Yes, that was just the way they all began, when they no longer loved their wives. She was walking fast now, an' the city stre. Is were giving way to board walks or footpaths. And the foolish little with nursed her anger and put a different construction to everything Jack had anid for weeks. The road led to a cliff looking out

The embroidery design for the top is shown, the little spray being reon the Atlantic, one of those coast scenes that Maine is famous for. Dol pented at each corner. Gut the silk for covering the top to fit it, allowly loved the sea and she stood for ing half an inch to turn over to the inside; work the design shown with ribbon and sequins, the stalks being me time glorying in the sight of the huge waves beating against the rocks. A child's voice aroused her and turning she saw a baby of about in cording stitch with embroidery silk. When the work is finished, four years, coming towards her av fast as his somewhat unsteady legs iron it on the wrong side over a thick ironing blanket. Put a thin layer of wadding over the lld, then stretch could carry him. He had escapefrom his mother's hold and had really been walking, or rather toddling, very well, when, upon almost reaching Dolly, he stumbled and fell. Shi rushed forward and picked him up His mother, a girl of her own age thanked her and tried to take th baby, but he would not go, to Dolly great delight. They stood watchin the sea for some time, when th child's mother broke the dience.

"How happy you must be," said she "You see, I know who you are, and the embroidered silk over it, firing the edges on inside of lid with mucioften see you and your husband driving by my house. Indeed I envy you. lage, a pretty zilk or tinnel galloon Dolly turned, amazed at the bitter ness in her voice. "But aren't you happy, too?" shthe lid, cut stiff paper on thin card a triffe smaller than lid, cover with a thin layer of wadding, then with slik asked. "You have the baby to make you still happier. The other girl brushed the dark halt into place under her scarlet tam-o-shanter and looked steadily at the whiriing water.

In giving a series of luncheons or dinners there is always a temptation to have the same dishes and to pick out those which the cook can prepare until it was all over. You see-well my husband left me. But i have never once-it is two years now since have the left me-stopped hoping and prayin. particularly well. I think this is the universal experience of the givers of small dinners. Now it happened to me to be invited several times to the same courses, and I was remind-me." Ther was no bitterness in th to me to be invited several times to the same courses, and I was remind-ed of the children's verse, "Same old soup, same old fish; same oid sauce in the same old dish." In orsweet voice now, only a great hope. Dolly was slient before this great trouble. What could she say? She tried to imagine what it would be i Jack should g. away for two years She thought of the wretched weeks der to avoid this with my own guests, I have a little book in which I write down the names of the persons endown the names of the persons en-tertained, with the dates and the menus in full. Whenever anyone is to be invited, I look this over care-fully to see that I am not culinarily of the morning "ame back to her. This other woman still filed his soul. Again he took u the picture and studied its slient beauty. "Virginia," he whispered, "why have the lists of dishes which have been had stayed out for two pairry nights
