Dedicated to MARY G. McCAWLEY

A quiet and a tranquil sea, The gentle winds to lightly blew Coquetting with the rippling waves They seemed to coax, they seem to woo the sea. Our thip was new and strong

It nestled song in Slumber Bay

And as a thing of life it seemed To wish to skim the ocean apray. Waiting a message through the sky To heaven and Gan's protecting care, We launched her out on waters high,

With courage, hope and faith to steer To lands across the mighty main For foriune or adventure bold "Never hazard, never gain," Was our notto in letters gold.

Our valiant caption knew to fear He often times the waters bound: His noble crew he held so dear None better had he ever found: The land soon faded out from sight We saw but clouds float through the bine The smokestack's smoke seemed to unite With them and then dissolve from view.

How mighty and how grand the diep Fathoms beceath what wealth there lies In caverus, lorests, mountains, steep, Hadden far from human eves In and out sea mousters dwell.

The God who hisbloned all things well Destined t ocean for their home. How silently our ship sailed on, There was scarce a ripple to be seen, The sun vaulted the meridian Seven times, and days were calm, serene, But on the eighth a sudden change Of wimi came on, the petre's flew Hither and thither. It was not strange

Sporting through waters as they roam;

To the captain nor the crew. Th' midshipman cried out "Clear the čeck And quickly, too." We harried down Into the cabin; we thought a wreck Would be our doom and all would drown For blackness like to night o'er spread The neavens is the high winds blew. The lightning flushed and overhead

Such thunder crashes we never knew

Our ship threened and on her side Like a levisthan dipped the sea, Then rose and dashed as if she tried To fight the claments' wild fury. Out on the raging ocean tossed By mountain billows. Did God hear Our shricking prayers, or were they lost? No hope, desp ir, God is not near,

With pallid lips that scarce could move And heaven fixed eyes we sought in vain For mercy from the God of love. Did he forsake us? No! The rain Absted and the sa for cries "Cheer up! Cheer up! No dangers fear There is a promise in the skies

For lairer winds and weather clear." Although tempest oxied, God roled the storm - And the winds and seas obeyed: As was H's manda e and no barm Came to us, for the prayers we said Were heard. We eached the distant land In safety; we hought no more Of fortune and our grateful band

Returned to their native shore. " CECHIA A. CULLEN.
