UNDER THE SYCAMORE TREE

Two lovers sat under a sycamore tree On a rade rustic seat while merrily Above them the robins were twitting. Around them the leaves were flitting, But they quite oblivious of birds or of leaves Were to each other revealing Their secrets of hearts, not concenling, But trusting, betrothing their faith and their love Under the sycamore tree.

Years passed and under the sycamore tree The same couple sat thinking pensively; Above them the robins were twitting, Around them the leaves were flitting, Life's changes had come but they remained true To each other and though neither broke The silence, their fond hearts spoke More eloquent far than when they first sat Under the sycamore tree.

The sycamore boughs have extended and there In the same rustic seat, ait another pair; Above them the robins are twitting, Around them the leaves are flitting, The swain and the maid their real love declare, "Tis only what has been before The same story told o'er and o'er Though old, it is new, and repeated the same Under the sycamore tree.
