Our Extravagance. Discussing England and the Enga recent American writer in England

"Nobody, from the kind down, le either ashamed or afraid to be economical. In England a man or a woman is thought to be a fool or a vulgarian who is not careful of expendi-ture, while in America our waiters have been clever enough to make it appear that economy is mean, and as a nation we suffer accordingly. We are fools to be fooled in this manner.

The Naked Truth. There is an ancient fable which tells us that on a summer afternoon Truth and Falsehood set out to bathe together. They found a crystal spring. They bathed in the cool, fresh water, and Falsehood, emerging first, clothed herself in the garments of Truth and went her way. But Truth, unwilling to put on the garb of Falsehood, departed naked. And to this day Falsehood wears Truth's fair white robes, so that many persons mistake her for Truth's very self, but poor Truth still goes naked.

Lewis, aged three, asked his mother what he was made of. The mother replied, "Sugar, because you are so sweet." Soon after she heard him declare to his little colored compan-ion, "I am made of white sugar and ou are made of brown sugar."-The Delineator

Of Interest to Women

To Overcome Difficulties Encountered in Living with Mother-in-Law, Bride Should Assume the Attitude of a Guest-Unremitting Courtesy Makes Feace.

A bride who has to live with her other-in-law may find daily life less omplicated if the thinks herself as may be a foriorn feeling at times, bu It has the merit of preventing assum-tion or undue familiarity on her paand will save many an attack of hear dickness or irritation.

It is a tradition that to live with her mother-in-law is a difficult matte for a young married woman. Because she is at home during the day, trifle constantly arise which she must is note or control, as the case may be If she takes the stillude of being, not a daughter of the house, but a guest, willing to add her quota to the enter-tainment and to be generally courte ous, many small matters will be kept from her, for a formal situation is created, and there will be a "thme-far and-no-farther" atmosphere that I easier to live in than the constant friction that sometimes exists in suc households.

A bride who lives with her mother in-law might as well recognize first as last that she cannot entertain he friends as she would if the were le friends as she would if the were it her own home. Her mother-in-law may be cordial, but the young woman will find that conditions are not as she would have them, and from her point of view the entertainment will be a failure. A formal dinner may be eminently successful where an informal luncheon would not succeed.

Her mother-informal may receive

Her mother-in-law may from her the same tactful courtes that the girl would practice toward any older woman in whose house she might be a welcome guest. But by might be a welcome guest. But by keeping to the guest and hosters attitude the girl assumes nothing and is therefore neither hard nor disappointed when little things are not as she would have them. In the house of a friend she would not expect her own ideas to be followed, and the house of her mother-in-law can only be that, save in exceptional instances.

Unremitting couriesy and a slight formality will make for peace and comfort with both daughter and moth-er-in-law. It is not well to go con-stantly from room to room so that privacy becomes impossible for either. For a few days this would not matter, but when months and years are to be lived together such trifles as respecting each other's rights and privacy become highly important.—Rosanna Schuyler, in New York Telegram.

Why She Quit. "I have given up all fads," a wom-an announced the other day, "and for the life of me I don't see how New York women can keep some of them up. I have been giving up cults and isms for some time, but recently I go hold of something that I thought would be the real thing for me. Why did give this up? Well, when the won an who is teaching it told me t imagine I was a beautiful lity sway ing gracefully in the breeze and smell-ing a delicious rose I decided all at ce that was too much to expect of woman weighing 180, and so I quit in disgust."

It seemed that French insensity have devised every sort of hatpin that could possibly be thought of, but now a new kind makes its appearance. This is the hatpin tipped with a peri-little animal head of fur. Tiny fox faces make these hatpins very attractive and they are used not only on the fur turbans, but on all hats trimmed with fur. New also are monogram hatpins carved from wood and highly varnished and polished when the careing has been completed.
