THE SHEPHERD MAID

"What are your thoughts my shepherd maid
In the field the whole long day
With your dumb friends, no companions I see
How do you while your time away?"

The maiden looked up with wondering eyes
At the stranger, who stood by her side.
She started to speak, but her heart on her cheek,
And to him in these words replied:

What are my thoughts? Why the skies, fields and flowers,
The stream and the rolling cascade,
I commune with all day while my sheep nip and play
In the meadows and rest in the shade.

Nature is a large book, I read it each day
As I sit on this moss covered stone;
I look up at the clouds as they pass overhead
For a moment and then they are gone.

As the clouds do not last I think of time past,
And new clouds come as did they;
That is time present, but time present is short
For it, too, soon passes away.

I look at the beautiful flowers and trees
All rich varied garments they wear,
But when Autumn sets in then they will begin
To rust them to the winds every where.

But there's a kind Hand that cares for them all,
Not a blade, leaf or flower is lost,
Whether trampled on earth or hid in a cave,
Or 'e'en on the wild billows tossed.

MENU FOR ENGLISH SERVANTS.

The Cost of a Prescription.
The writer took a doctor's prescription to the drug store to have it filled. In some way this piece of paper became torn in half, so that when the patron handed the druggist the first piece that public servant at once measured out the ammonia salt it called for, and placed the small vial before his customer.
"How much?" asked the patron.
"Ten cents."
"Oh, beg pardon!" said the purchaser, at this juncture finding the remainder of the prescription in his pocket. "This piece says to add enough water to the other to make four ounces."
"Very well," rejoined the apothecary, dumping the contents of the small vial into a four-ounce bottle and adding the required water. "There you are, sir, forty cents more, please."
"What! Ten cents for ammonia and forty cents for the water?"
"Exactly. The doctor's name writes after the water makes it a prescription, and we put up no prescriptions under fifty cents." Judge.

From the Gallery.
A troupe of colored players was playing Othello. The play had reached that stage where Othello demands of Desdemona the handkerchief he has given her.
"Desdemona, what's dat handkerchief?"
"Dat's de one, of course having lost de handkerchief, bowed her head, and said nothing."
"Desdemona, what's dat handkerchief?"
"No, no, no."
"Now, I beg, shell out, what's dat handkerchief?"
By this time a god in the gallery became excited and shouted down:
"For de Lawd's sake, Niggah, wipe yo' nose on yo' sleeve and let de play go on!"
