A Love So Great

"There is a love so great," began Bob Travers, then stopped and reddened at sight of the older man's quizzical smile.

"Go on, my boy," said Griscoon, kindly. "It sounds as though it might be interesting. Is it theory or experience?"

"Why—er—a little of either, perhaps. But I'm sure it's fact. I believe there is a love so great that it will forgive anything."

"You know Dick Turner, Bob? And his father?"

"Dick, of course, and his father a little," Bob answered, in some surprise.

"Ever hear about the older man's early—er—tragedy? No? Well, he was a quiet studious man, a home lover, and how he came to love and marry a more butterfly like Nancy Turner is more than I can explain. I saw quite a good deal of the Turners that winter, then they suddenly disappeared from the place they had been in the habit of frequenting. For three or four months I saw nothing of them, except as it happened to meet them driving. I noticed then there was an odd new tenderness in Turner's expression as he watched his wife, which he seemed to be always doing.
Then, unexpectedly to me at least, came the news of the baby's birth. It was Dick, you know, the only one they ever had. I hardly knew Turner when I saw him next. His face wore an expression such as I had never seen except in the faces of happy mothers.
For perhaps a year Nancy Turner was bound up in her lovely new toy and she went about very little. Then gradually she took her old place again among the butterflies, but now with a certain little air of matronly dignity which added to her beauty and charm.

"Turner was deep in some far flung research, and went about very little.
Nancy, left a good deal to herself, took up one fast after another, until she landed in the midst of the Robemmans. One of them, a large, baby-blue-eyed man, came after a fashion, constituted himself her instructor, with the other members of their immediate set as fluent and willing assistants.

"The fast faded for months, but just before the bridegroom found out him, Babesley, the handsome 'instructor,' disappeared. Mrs. Turner threw herself with doubled energy into the maelstrom of society, and for several years she was a leader in her set, but gradually the strain told on her.
Everyone could see that it was telling on Turner, too, though in a different way. His home was nothing more than a lodging place, mismanaged by servants who had their own way in almost everything, and ruled by the little chap who had his way in everything. It was a very sweet little way, to tell the truth. Poor old Turner was bound up in the boy. It got round somehow that he put the little fellow to bed every night with his own hands and sat beside him all his life since.

"Then suddenly came the news of Mrs.
Turner's sudden and serious illness.
It was pneumonia and she had worn her strength and nerves down so fine that she had little left to fight with.
For several days the doctors fought for her, but there came a day when one of them told Turner, not looking at the white, drawn face before him, that the end was surely not more than a day away. That she would probably never see another morning.
Turner stood dazed, then groined and staggered to her bedside, where he dropped to his knees, one of his little feverish hands pressed to his pale lips. For hours he knelt there.
Then slowly she stirred and feebly turned her head and breathed his name. At the sound he looked up, his eyes dim with agony, and saw in the depths of her eyes the knowledge that the end was near. At a faint pressure of her hand, he drew himself still closer, and slowly, weakly, she began—with many pauses, to rest. She told him things which he had never for an instant suspected, some even which others had not suspected. Motionless, turned to stone, he knelt, till she had finished, and lay panting with exhaustion, starting into his eyes. Then with a groan of utter anguish, he dropped his head upon the frail little hand and covered it with kisses. The tears rushed to her eyes and rained over her white cheeks. "Oh, you are so good, so heavenly good. I never dared hope for forgiveness," she gasped. "I had not believed anyone could be so merciful and good."

"Slowly he drew himself up until his lips lay on her cheek, then on her lips. Slowly her lids dropped over dazzling eyes. So they found them later, he in a faint that was almost death."

Griscoon stopped abruptly. Bob Travers held his rigid pose a moment, then shook himself as though waking from sleep.

"Well, doesn't that prove—" he began eagerly, but Griscoon interrupted.
"That was not the end," he remarked, slowly. "She did not die after all.
She woke the next morning out of danger. As soon as she was well, Turner brought suit for divorce."

Bob Travers looked profoundly dejected and a good deal bewildered.

"But I don't see," he began, but again Griscoon interrupted. "No, my boy, I realize that," he said, as he rose to go. "The only ones who do see are the ones who have been through it all."

Bob stared after the receding figure in awning comprehension.

"Now I wonder," he muttered, to no one in particular.—MRS. EMILY DOB-SON.

"BEST GIRL" INNOVATION.

Miss Cunliffe's Chum Attends Her Wedding, Just Like "Best Man."

"The best girl" at a wedding is an innovation that is startling society. It is the novel idea of Miss Balfour Pick-ersgill Cunliffe, who was married at St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, to Arthur Bertram Randolph, son of the late Arthur Randolph Randolph, of Eastcourt, Malmesbury, whose wife was from South Carolina.

Instead of having a bevy of fair maidens in attendance at the wedding, the bride's great chum, Miss Coshed, acted as best girl, undertaking exactly the same duties as James Gordon, the best man, undertook for his chum.

Miss Coshed, the best girl, appropriately costumed, entered the church by the vestry door, where she waited until the bride arrived, then took up her stand on the left hand side at the top centre of the aisle exactly opposite the best man. Her duties were to hold the bride's bouquet and her gloves, and to see that the kneeling stood, was in position for the bride.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the bride and bridegroom were followed to the vestry by the best girl and best man, who signed the register as witnesses. Then they escorted the happy couple to their carriage to see them off to the Hyde Park Hotel, where the bride's mother held a reception.

The bride, who is the pretty daughter of Mrs. Pickersgill Cunliffe, of St.
Augustine Manor, Huntingdonshire, and No. 20 Egerton Terrace, London, and one of the most popular girls in society, said concerning the innovation:

"I don't see why I shouldn't have my best girl chum in close attendance upon me on my wedding day, when Arthur can have his best man chum supporting him."

Besides, she said, she does not see the use for bridesmaids, who only crowd the aisle and prevent many guests from seeing anything of the actual ceremony. Society attended the wedding in great numbers.

Peer Uncle Ed.

A Baltimore man was recently showing his new opera hat to his little nephew, and when he caught the top-plate to spring upon three or four times the youngster was delighted.

A few days thereafter the uncle, during a visit to the same household, brought with him a silk hat of the shiny, non-collapseable kind. When he was about to leave the house he encountered the aforesaid youngster tumbling down the hall with what looked like a black accordion.

"Uncle Ed," observed the boy, "this one goes awfully hard. I had to sit on it, but even then I couldn't get it more than half shut."

What Ruined Adam.

A young English suffragette tells the following incident that recently happened at a meeting in the Scotch Highlands.

Speeches had been made to a large crowd. Questions had been replied to, and applause. Inbetween young men making remarks about anti-fair babies and sending words had been silenced.
Then, just as there was a temporary lull before the putting of a resolution, a great bellowed Scotch voice from the back of the crowd rasped slowly in with the inquiry, obviously the result of prolonged rumination:

"Who made a mess of Adam?"

Helpful Beauty Hints

Handy Device for Helping a Woman Dry Her Hair—Household Duties May Be Performed While the Frame is Still on the Shoulders.

Usually when a woman washes her hair at home she puts a towel over her shoulders and sits in the sun, if there is any sun, to dry it. A New Jersey man has invented a device which displaces the towel and makes the drying operation quicker and in every way more satisfactory. This device is a semicircular wire frame with teeth pointing upward. A cross-bar through the middle keeps it firm and the ends are arranged to be strapped on the shoulders, while another crosspiece fits across the back. After the hair has been washed this frame is fastened on and the hair spread over it, the teeth keeping the strands separated. Open in this way, the hair will dry much more rapidly than in the old way and more thoroughly. The framework is so light as to be scarcely felt, and a woman may go about her household duties with it on. When not in use the dryer can be folded up to occupy but little space.

Caring for White Hair.

White hair, like white gowns, needs careful handling or it soon is ugly, and ill-kept looking.

Brushes and combs should be washed every day or so. A dusty brush makes white hair dull.

As this hair is more brittle than any other, it must not be roughly handled.
Do not tug or pull at it with a comb, and do not use too drying washes or dry with too much heat.

Ordinary shampoo mixtures are apt to make white hair streaky. The best for it is made from the white of two eggs mixed lightly with a tablespoonful of warm water.

Rub mixture well into scalp, parting hair in strands and also washing long hair. Rinse thoroughly with lukewarm water, then cold. Either spring or filtered water should be used on white hair.

Many tonics used with good effect even on golden hair are not suitable for white-haired women. If carefully applied, crued oil can be used occasionally or a little white vasoline may be rubbed into the scalp.

In using any grease keep it off long hair, as it acts as a dust collector and dulls the lustre of hair.

White hair to be lovely must have a silvery tint. When the hair is at pepper and salt stage it can sometimes be made white quickly by intelligent treatment by a professional.

Shampooing the hair with lemon is excellent for white hair. Put half the oil lemon in a thin muslin cloth, and rub over scalp, which has first been thoroughly wet.

The white-headed woman should not be careless of her hairdressing. Her hair should be loosely waved and worn elaborately, irrespective of styles of the moment.

A Shampoo Board.

The one drawback of the visiting hairdresser is that many of the appliances in use in a first-class establishment are wanting.

Chief among these appliances is a shampoo board. There are various kinds, but most of them are of metal, with a curved space for the back of the neck, and grooves on which the hair is laid and the water runs into the stationary basin.

With the use of one of these boards the fatigue of leaning over a washstand for a half hour while the hair is washed and rinsed is done away with.
One can sit comfortably in a chair with the neck resting on the board and the hair spread over it.

The stout woman who objects to stooping, or any one with weakness of heart and shortness of breath, likes the board, which can be served in any washstand. It is scalp and lends added benefit to the restful treatments.

Collures.

J. M. L.—You should rejoice in having a low forehead, for it is a decidedly beautiful feature. I can imagine nothing prettier than your hair parted in the middle and brought back at either side so that the line of hair runs on a straight line to the back of the head. This gives a wide effect on top that is becoming. Then you twist the long ends into a soft knot, or coil it over the head in modified turban fashion.

The best way of doing this is to divide the hair into two parts and twist it like a cable. I would not ruff the locks, as it is bad for them.

Uses for Hot Water.

The best medical preparation in the world is plain hot water. Drink a glass of it every night if you want a good digestion, a good sleep and a clear complexion. Put a bag of it to your feet when you have a cold, to your back when you have a backache or at the nape of your neck when you have a headache or feel sleepless.
Soak the feet in it when they are tired.
Soak the hands in it before manicuring.
