Quarrelsome Musical Minds. Something in the musical mind seems to be very primitive and quar-relsome, inviting doubt as to the celestial origin of the "heaven descended muse," and suggesting that it is a juice of the hazament and not icher from the top stories of the brain. Parrots and mocking birds, when it comes to whistling and staging, are some success, and are both as spite-ful and jealous as devils and mon-

The Natural Bridge.
The average height of the cliffs about the Natural Bridge is about 250 feet; the height of the bridge about 230. The span of the arch is 98 feet; its average width 50 feet, and its thick-ness in the centre 55 feet. The bridge does not cross the chasm precisely at right angles, but in an oblique direcis covered by a clay soil to the depth of several feet, which nourishes a con-siderable growth of trees and Sushes These, with masses of rock, serve to form the natural parapets along the aides, which quits coaceal the view of chasm below.
