The phenomenal growth of the Keystone party which polled about four hundred thousand votes at the last election has aroused general comment in the papers in the State. It had no existence two months before election, had no funds and no organization. It could not use the means usually employed by the old parties to win votes and yet men flocked to it in surprising numbers. It was a protest against the men named by the old parties and the methods employed in their nomination. People were dissatisfied with the old leaders and their ways and they determined to rebuke them. Probably had there been an honest ballot and a fair count Barry would have been elected. There is talk now of reforming the old parties from within themselves. When the capitol seal was first disclosed those charged with the frauds set about investigating themselves with such very satisfactory results that the Governor was moved to say that their were no bills worth mentioning. This was reform from within, but when the matter was carefully investigated from outside several very serious bills were discovered and the perpetrators were punished.

To inspire confidence the old party must be reorganized with new leaders, the people must have a distinct voice in making nominations, there must be no boss dictation and no dark lantern system of forcing candidates on the party, especially men with clouded reputations, or men who are put forward by manipulating conventions. Nominations must be made in a free and open manner by independent delegates and the men named must be such as to inspire confidence with the people. The upheaval in several states was primarily founded on distrust of the men named and voters were simply expressing their protest. It was deep and loud but only a saphyr compared with what it will be if there is not a real reformation of the old parties. The Keystone party is here to stay and it will dominate if not superseded by genuine reform in the old parties.

All who were present, and a goodly number was, at the M. E. Church last evening to hear Leon Rice, tenor, will unite in saying that he has a finely cultivated voice and a very pleasing manner. His selections were excellent in character and appropriate to bring out variety in sentiment and display the range of his power. Mrs. Rice, Accompanist, so modulated the piano as to give volume and expression to the music of the singer and the combination charmed the audience. The course is well worthy of support and all who have not secured tickets will miss an opportunity of being well repaid if they do not do so.

A GRAVEYARD RAMBLE.

I took a stroll in the graveyard One bleak November day. When the skies were dull and leaden And all around looked gray. And gloomy, as my thoughts were; I felt in pensive mood. And sought a lonely hour That I might think and brood.

It was very still and silent, Not a living soul was seen, And all alone I wandered Through the narrow paths, Between the marble head stones And monuments so grand. They looked like ghastly sentinels Guarding the sleeping band.

There stood a massive granite shaft That towered up so high. It seemed to say that "neath it No common form could lie; A magnate's name I read, And knew him through hearsay; I wondered if his body Became high graded clay.

What wealth I saw about me In those cold well chiseled stones; The sculptor's grandest masterpiece Is raised o'er rich men's bones; Oh! What a sham and mockery The poor, that man oppressed And filled his coffers from the blood Of starved—but let him rest.

I passed along and then I came To a lone neglected spot, Where weeds had grown and read "Here lie my bones," so rest. No name, no teeds recorded; Naught else could be seen. But I felt that, 'till unknown one Had been somewhat like to me.

Soon my three score years and ten Will pass, I too will lie Beneath the sod forgotten, But little will care I If my God to try soul marry Will show 'twill matter not; I'll choose this crude inscription: "Here lie my bones to rot." CECILIA A. CULLEN.
