Think not that man was born to live And die amid the selfish schemes Of his own wicked and ungrateful heart; A higher destiny is his. High, noble And enduring as sempiternal love, His deeds outlive the grave, and Will adorn or stigmatize his name. A marble slab will mark thy home And hear upon its sacred front A record of thy noble deeds; or Blast thy name with full detail Of thy inglorious life. Or Yet Another still more just will linger Mid the fading scenes of this Brief transitory lile, and never will Recant, till bounding hearts of flesh And blood lie cold and still. And thus 'tis not for life alone But deathless years - we live. 'Mid all the poisoned woe that stings The healthy plant, and causes Bitter fruit, the highest genius In this catalogue of crime We reckon base—ingratitude. Benevolence and charity can never find A kenial home where this vile trait Exults with fiendish joy o'er fallen Hopes and bitter tears. Ah! thou Foolish dolt! Can others wipe away Thy guilt that thou shouldst Sin the more? and leave a cursing Train behind to execute thy name.
