A RURAL PICTURE.

The roof is covered with velvet moss,
And the roses over the window arch,
And the robin is singing her vesper song
As she flies to her nest in the larch.

A row of elms before the door,
And a gentle slope of tender green;
And a bed of mourning violets
Wedged nicely in between,

There's a path that leads to the meadow gate,
And the meadow bespangled over with flowers,
And the cattle stand in the shady brook
Through the sultry noontide hours.

The lilacs toss their conical bloom,
Covering the ground with their purple tinged stars;
And the sheep troop down the hill in flocks
And bleat as they reach the bars.

The phlox flings its clouds of odor away,
And the read breasted humming bird hums around,
Jaring the stock and flying away,
While the pinks leaves fall to the ground.

The apple trees are clothed in a cloud of white,
Tinged here and there with a streak of red,
And the brook flashes and shimmers in the genial light
While the pebbles repose on its bed.

Under a group of locust trees
That stands like sentinels, tall and grim,
The spring gushes out from a mossy stump.
The drinking vessel, a rusty tin.

Around the spring so mossy and clear
The violets lurk, a modest race,
But the wind as it tosses the leaves aside
Fully reveals their hidding place.

The wild grape hangs in festoons 'round the spring
Luring the wasp and the brown-coated bee;
While the red bird whistles and flutters all day
Among the boughs of the maple tree.

The speckled trout glid through the cresses that float
On the surface so glassy and clear,
And the brown-coated mocking-bird mimics the tune
Of the other songsters far and near.

"MADGE."

Further from Richmond.

Baltimore, July 15.—The American has the following additional news brought by Mr. Aiery, who escaped from Richmond, last Tuesday:

There is much sickness in Richmond among the citizens, principally typhoid fever. There are also sick and wounded soldiers in almost every house.

Our informant was on the battle-field of Friday, the 27th, and represents it to have presented a scene of the most shocking character. The Federals had carried all their wounded to the Savage Station hospital whilst the battle progressed, and not more than twelve of their dead were found on the field. The rebel dead were to the number of nearly one thousand, who still lay as they had fallen, two days after the battle. On the approaches to the Federal works, which were stormed, the dead bodies were literally piled upon each other.

Mr. Aiery made his escape along with three other Union men, and reached the Potomac on Friday evening, having walked sixty miles, avoiding both the Federal and rebel pickets. Having secured a boat, he was landed in Charles county, where he found the people as rank rebels as those he left behind in Richmond.

A VENERABLE lady in her hundredth year lost her daughter, who had attained the good old age of 80. The mother's grief was great; and to a friend who came to condole with her, she remarked, "Oh dear! oh dear! I knew I should never be able to raise that child!"

THE REASON WHY.—The reason the Southern women are so bitter, in this rebellion, against the peopel on the North, is, that the Southern men prefer the Northern women to them, and they are afraid, if the war ceases, they will all have to die old maids.

All of the Rebel prisoners confined in the forts in New York harbor have been sent to Fort Deleware, below Philadelphia, for safe keeping, from which place they will be conveyed South for exchange when the proper arrangements have been perfected.
