A spirit makes its tone;
All spotless pure and beautiful, Before the holy throne. No blight of years is on her brow, No sadness, care, nor stain; For Paradise has early called,

Its bright one home again. We felt she was too fair for earth, For ever 'mid her play, There stole from those young earnest eyes, A sweet and soul-like ray.

radience from the "spirit land, Around her cradle smil'd ! Drawing all hearts with magic spell, To that lovely child.

There's darkness o er that happy hearth, Whose sunny light hath fled; And aching hearts are mourning there, Their first and gent'c dead.

The innocent the beautiful, Blooming in life's young hours;
One season's sun scarce kiss'd the bud E're paled the fragrant flower. The Father weeps his worshipp'd one,

No human love could save , The broken-hearted Mother's tears, -Rain o'er her idol's grave; Whose lisping tongue forever mute, Will never breathe her name; Whose infant hands with loving trust, Will ne'er clusp fier's again.

All sympathy is thine dear triends, Yet turn thy gaze afar; Where beams in glory's trembling light,

A sweet unfading star And smile to think thine is the lot,

To give unsulfied, free;
A young pure spirit back to God,
To plead with him for thee. A few short years and ye shall meet,

Where ties no more are riven; And thy Dove of promise, passed before, Shall welcome thee to Heaven.
