

CARRIER'S ADDRESS
"VILLAGE RECORD"

Swift as the sweeping Autumn blast,
Another year has quickly past,
While months (and months) are gone,
This month of life and soul.
Another year, ah! what a thought,
What sorrows felt, what pleasures sought,
What hopes have fled on fleeting wings,
What fears been shed as offerings—
What dangers still beset the State,
What blood and carnage, envy, hate
O'er fierce Rebellion's path of woe,
Cast every shade that Demons know;
Keen are our pangs, but keener still
Must be the fond-like thoughts that fill
The cold unfeeling, barb'rous breast
That stirs dumb manhood from its rest,
Rings the chain of eagle from its nest,
And waked the lion from his lair;
Bid Peace her dewy wings extend,
Exalt her foe, debase her friend,
Rivers of blood can ill atone
For this one act of madness done;
Thrones may tremble, empires fall,
Oblivion will not blot this scroll,
Though war with all its horrid train,
In tears, its woe, its blood and pain,
Still reveals 'mid Ambition's slaves,
And strews the earth with hostile graves;
Yet o'er the grim look of each scar
Our blooming fields more beautiful far,
Evil the flowers of their worth,
By giving Nations' Arrows his;
But still Rebellion's hydra head
Lifts up its crest amid the dead,
Warms its life-blood from our veins,
Purges its guilt by Northern stains;
No murderer though vile he be,
But will receive warm sympathy
From all his brethren of the trade,
Though he be lowest of the grade;
Then how can Treason's low estate
Be closed but with the good and great,
Since traitors glory in the name
That alternates 'twixt "fiend" and "shame,"
Humanity may weep and mourn—
Fair Liberty may rave and scorn—
The Union too may ruefully
Since 'tis the source of every woe.
In short—though traitors' fair would be
The god-like friends of Liberty,
Yet 'neath their cold professions dwell
The envenom'd scorpion sting of hell;
But ah! the flag that freedom love
Will glitter as the stars above;
And all its lustre beauties glow
To every skulking dastard foe,
From Shilo's consecrated plain,
Baptized with many a crimson stain,
The welcome shouts of victory
Proclaim the valor of the free,
And where Antietam's placid stream
Reflects the moon's (if gentle) beam,
There too, the stony banner wave
Undimmed by time or hostile grave,
The darkness of the stormy night
Evince some signs of joyous light,
The placid silvery streaks of gray
Will ere long dapple into day,
Then, Keaton's sceptre in his right
Will sway the realm of endless night,
And bleeding thousands wounded, sore,
Will learn the art of war no more,
God speed the day!—for Angels weep
To see the wounds—the last long sleep,
And hear the groan—the sigh, the sob,
That wakes the heart for its last throb.
But now, kind Patrons, we will leave
These scenes which only serve to grieve,
And haste to finish these poor rhymes
By asking you for "tips" and "dimes";
So come along now one and all
And bring your "cash," both great and small.
The Bible says that well-spent pence
Will surely come a long time hence,
So never fear we'll pay the due,
When traitors swear that they are true,
And "caroline" is thrown away
And midnight seems the heart of day.
THE CARRIER.
