Narrow Escape of General Grant and Sherman.

The Cincinnati Gazette gives the following particulars of the railroad disaster, already reported, in which General Grant had a narrow escape.

Lieutenant General Grant, in order to gratify the wishes of the people of Indiana, visited Indianapolis on Tuesday, where he was received with that enthusiasm which has greeted him every where on his round of travels through the United States.

Desiring to return to this city Tuesday night, a special train, consisting of a locomotive, tender, and passenger coach, was placed at his disposal. This started from Indianapolis late in the evening, and no mishap was experienced until it reached Guilford, about ten miles west of Lawrenceburg, at one o'clock A. M.

It was not far from this place, on the same road, that a train containing Governor Morton was thrown from the track some time ago.

The train on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad which left St. Louis at 8 P. M., Tuesday, met with an accident, which came near proving serious, twelve miles east of Vincennes, about 12 o'clock the same night.

This accident to General Sherman occurred near about the same time that the special train, conveying Lieutenant General Grant from Indianapolis, was thrown from the track.

Life with its ceaseless changes rolled on, endeavoring the new husband in the affections of the erst-while, lonely and forgotten woman, and added fresh olive buds to her peaceful home circle.

Each of the men urged his affection for the lady, and each declared he sought but her happiness, and was willing to abide by her decision to go or stay and after this full exposition of their sentiments the two men started down the street, leaving the lady of their desires to make her decision unimpeded by either.
