m. Mrs. C. E. M'Kay, of Massachusets. memorialized Congress, the other day, tomonstrating against the right of suffrage being granted to women. She believes that a large proportion of her sex do not want the ballot, for the following reasons: It is outside of their proper sphere, and women have already enough to do without mixing in politics, and universal woman suffrage would imperil the safety of the Republic by an immense increase of the unintelligent and incompetent vote. Mrs. M'Kay considers the colored woman of the South far more ignorant and imbruted than the men, and that it would be dangerous to give them the vote. Womankind in general she recommends to go in and win in the various fields now opened to her, and not bother about the ballot.

Commander Williams, of the United States gunboat Opeida, who heroically shared the fate of his vessel when she sank in the Japan Sea, was an officer who won distinction in the war of the rebellion. He was on board one of the monitors which made the celebrated night assault upon Fort Sumter, and commanded the party which landed on that occasion. He was then captured and taken to Columbia, where he was chained to a fellow officer, as was stated, in retaliation for an attempt to treat certain confederate sailors as pirates. He remained in chains in a loathsome dungeon for six months. Before he left the United States Meadville, Pennsylvania, representative in for the last time, he lost his wife by death, and he placed his only child, a son of six Georgis, Fortieth Congress; John M. THE PROSPECT. The N. Y. Herald of a cont date, says, not since the apring of 1860 have we had such duluess of trade, as we have had since Junuary of this year. It still continues. It is gratifying, however, to know that the darkest hour has been all but, if not absolutely, reached. In the mercantile community generally doubt and fear begin to rield to hope and confidence. The steady decline of gold has had a depressing and embarrassing effect on the trading community. In proportion as it is felt that bottom is about reached there is a growing feeling of accurity. The feeling which expressed itself so happily in the government printing office at Washington on Saturday on the occasion of the visit of General Grant is widespread over the community. It is Gold is still "tumbling", and has a felt that in spite of the somewhat protracted get not the Printer. If Congress will act wisely and with becoming promptitude we shall soon feel ourselves on solid ground, and merchants will take courage .--Under the new condition of things and on a basis satisfactory and enduring we shall adishable with three years'-hard-labor in the vance with firm step towards a prosperity penitentiary and one thousand dollars fine to which we have never bitherto experienced make any distinction in any theatre, etc., on The millions of gold now lying useless in the preserved twenty-two years. The only way to strike at the root of the evil is to punish or banish these mischievous, rascals, who have been, beyond doubt, the cause of nearly every Indian war for years past. A considerable amount, if not all, of the appropriations made to our copper colored friends by the government falls into the hands of these rapacious harpies, and the inevitable result is to drive the Indians on the warpath. If the Peace Commissioners and trontier commanders would only hang a few of these worthies they would do more to put a stop to the annual outrages which desolate the settlements of the far West than all the treaties in Christendom. The experiment is well worth trying,

> A woman got the best of the recorder of New Orleans. Maggie Füller, having been brutaily abused by her drunken husband, had him arrested and taken before the Recorder for punishment. "Why do you wish to prosecute your husband?" asked the magistrate. "Because he deserves it," replied the woman Recorder-"Yes; but the court room is no place to settle these difficulties. Why don't you go home and fix the matter up there?" Woman-"He won't go home without first getting drunk." Record-"Yes I know you have; that's the reason why he gets drunk so often." This shot completely urset the Recorder's wonted gravity, and he ordered the woman and her husband to be "put out" at once. As they were leaving she turned to the Recorder and said, "That's so, Judge, you've both been drunk together a hundred times." The court immediately adjourned.

A few days ago two follows, while inebriated, assaulted a gentleman on the highway near Lewiston, Maine, and codeavored to shoot him. The interposition of a fourth person saved his life. Afterwards the offenders called upon him to see if they could not prevent a prosecution.
