It is said that he announced that if no help from the outside was received he would be compelled to surrender before the public buildings were destroved. So far, however, the bourbardment is reported to be almost harmless in the destruction of property. The battle of Et. Quentin resulted in an utter defeat of the army of General Faidherbe, and the victorions Germans marched northward from the battle field to Cambrai, the French continuing a desultory fighting with their advance. Faidherbe lost ten thousand prisoners, and with his Staff has gone to Douia. In Northbetta arrived there on Saturday and delivered an address to the people, in which he advised resistance to the last, and said that Faidherbe would continue to oppose the adwished to form a Dictatorship, and denounsed the cowardly ery for peace.
