The Broken Engagement.

CHAPTER I. It was a beautiful evening in the dawn of summer. Two forms were setting in close proximity to, one another by the window of a twelve thousand dollar house—heavily mortgaged—in the upper part of this city.

"Dearest Flora, tell, oh tell me what I can do to make myself more worthy of your love. Bid me undertake any mission you please, and I will obey. Aye, even though it be—to cut my hair short—sacrifice my moustache—wear large boots, or work for my living—speak, anything you command me."

"O Charles! calm yourself. Do not speak in this terrible strain; you make me shudder. No, Charles, I love you for yourself alone." Then placing her hand gently upon his brow, she murmured, "soft, my love, speak soft, my own, and tell me do you love me as much as ever, and will I ever be the same to you as I am now?"

"Hear me swear!" cried the ardent youth, dropping upon his knees for the first time in his life, but suddenly rising with a troubled expression of countenance, as something put him in mind of the tightness of his rafter apparel.

"O Flora, there is not a coat that adorns any tailor's window in Broadway, that has so high a place in my affections as yourself! You are to me what claret and gossip are to young church members, or funerals to married women—my life, my ambition, my hope, my all! A few days ago, and we shall be united forever. I can scarcely realize my happiness."

Upon the dining room table lay many dishes and other articles of crockery. Before it, with dishevelled hair and tucked-up gown, stood Flora, a huge carving-knife in her hand, which she was in the act of plunging—into a pan of hot water.

"She had been caught in the act of doing housework! With one loud shriek she fell to the floor, while her distracted and bewildered lover rushed from the house.

It is needless to add that the engagement, along with several brittle cups, was broken on the spot. Thus were two fond and dotting hearts irrevocably separated!

"FAITHFUL FOUND."—Historians will have recorded the fact that in the Great Insurrection of 1861—2, throughout the Seceding States, the oppressed Colored people (bound and free) were the truest, best, most self-sacrificing, most serviceable friends of the Union.

Strange discoveries are made by all "furriners" when they first arrive in American waters. Columbus was a "furriner" and discovered this country. Quite an extraordinary was the discovery made by an Irish immigrant, when he arrived in New-York harbor and heard the sunset gun.
