The Ninety days Militia, according to an order, are to rendezvous at the following places: 3,000 at Huntingdon, 17,000 at Harrisburg, and 20,000 at Reading, being the quota for the Department of the Susquehanna. Of this number 3,000 should be mounted rifle-men, who would furnish their own horses—to be paid 40 cents per day by the Government for the use of the horses. Twenty companies of sharpshooters, each 100 strong, should be chosen among the mountain people. Twenty companies of artillery, of 100 each, with a battery of 4 pieces.

The Adams Express Company at Baltimore have, since the late battles, established an ambulance corps for the accommodation of the wounded, and on Sunday they sent up to Gettysburg horses and wagons with supplies of delicacies and wines for the use of the sick soldiers. A wagon load of like refreshments, to be contributed by the citizens of Baltimore will be despatched daily to the scene of the late battles.

In two weeks time, without military organization and without martial law, the citizens of Pittsburgh have, with pick and shovel, constructed a line of entrenchments around that city, reaching fifteen miles in extent.

The niece of Oliver Goldsmith, says an exchange, is now living in Hoboken, New Jersey, in somewhat reduced circumstances. She is the daughter of his youngest sister, Kate Goldsmith, of whom Washington Irving, in his life of the poet, asks: "What has become of his sister Kate?"

Dr. John Thomas, of Marlborough, who is 40 years of age and has a wife and three children, recently eloped with Mary Jane Wheeler, a romantic miss of twenty, while his wife had gone on a visit to Connecticut.

There is an elm tree on the Green, in Wethersfield, Conn., known to be one hundred and five years old. Two feet from the ground the girth is 25 feet, and the spread of the branches is 145 feet 8 inches. They think it is the largest one in New England.

A Dr. Sittenais, of Cincinnati, owner of the Cincinnati Union, and an habitual opium eater, came to his death, a few days since, by eating an unusual quantity of the drug.

As a man was riding in West Charleston, Vermont, a match with which he had lit a cigar set fire to the foot mat in the buggy, and his horse took fright, and before it could be stopped the buggy was pretty much burned up.

A letter from Gettysburg says: The prisoners express a hope to see this trouble ended. The prisoners were frank, communicative, and to all appearance without an unkind feeling toward Northern men.

While Mr. David J. Cathcart, the enrolling officer from Knox township, Clearfield county, Pa., was riding along a road, he was twice fired at and severely wounded in the foot by some person concealed in a thicket. His horse was also shot in the leg.

The New York Post has the following: Capt. Ryerson, of the 13th New Jersey Regiment, who reached his home at Newark, this morning, (July 8,) says that before he left his regiment General Meade made an address to the army, in which he stated that the rebel loss was 35,000. Gen. Meade had captured in all 60 pieces of artillery.

News reached Harrisburg on Wednesday by telegraph, by the way of London and Bedford, shows that the main body of Lee's army is between South Mountain and Hagerstown. He will probably select a place between Hagerstown and the Potomac, to give Gen. Meade battle, as it is considered utterly impossible for him to reach Virginia.

Major Gen. Meade is described as a tall, slim, gray-haired man, wearing glasses, an old slouched hat, a blue blouse, with corduroy pants tucked into his long jack boots. He is ungainly in looks and actions, plain of speech and familiar and free in conversation when not occupied with business. The whole style of the man is unassuming and plain even to severity.

The Rt. Rev. Francis Patrick Kenrick, D. D., Catholic Archbishop of Baltimore, died suddenly on the morning of the 9th inst., at his residence in that city, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He was born in Dublin, and educated for the Church at Rome, and came to the United States in 1821. He was Bishop of Philadelphia from 1841 to 1851, when he was appointed Archbishop of Baltimore.

The Battles near Gettysburg.

The great battles fought near Gettysburg on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, July 1st, 2d and 3d, will never be forgotten. A correspondent writing from the field says "the sun of Austerville is not more memorable than that which is just flagging its dying rays over the field of this, the third days successful battle. The victory won by General Meade is now so decisive that no one in this army pretends to question the rout and demoralization of the rebel army under General Lee. The battles of the first and second days were sufficiently terrible, but in that which has followed today, the fighting done, not only by our troops, but those of Lee's army, will rank in heroism, in perseverance, and in savage energy, with that of Waterloo.

The position of Lee at the close of Tuesday was such that he was forced to reduce all his energies on the next day into one grand desperate and centralizing attempt to break through our army. His divisions were so much cut up as to render a pitched battle from wing to wing one of awful hazard. Until nearly noon the battle raged without intermission when the firing slackened, but at one o'clock, was renewed at different points along the line with a fierceness premonitory of the terrific engagement that ensued. The engagement began in earnest; the firing became a continuous roar. It appeared at one time as though not a foot of air was free from the hail of missiles that tore over and through our ranks. Our men stood the shock with a courage sublime. The carnage of this assault among the rebels was so fearful that even the unionists who rested on their arms triumphant, after the foe had retreated beyond their fire, as they cast their eyes downward upon the panoramas of death and wounds illuminated by the sun that shone upon the slope between them, were seen to shudder and sicken and turn away.

It was said by rebel prisoners who were taken after the battle, that the last frightful and desperate charge was led by Gen. Lee in person, so desperate did he regard the conflict, but back as readily as a girl hurls the shuttlecock, did the soldiers of our gallant army hurl into chaotic retreat the hosts that came on and on, over stones and ditches, over the bodies of fallen comrades, piling its dead in heaps and making the soil over which it trod, ghastrly and alive with struggling wounded. The mountains in the neighborhood are full of rebel soldiers, fleeing they know not whither.

The Friday's battle was unquestionably, the bloodiest of the war, and the victory the most complete.

In the town of Gettysburg, when we drove the enemy out of it, we captured a large number of Union prisoners, reported by some as high as 1500, many of whom were wounded. There were also several thousand wounded rebels, every horse being filled with them.

During Saturday thousands of prisoners and straggling rebels were entering Gettysburg with captured wagons and cannon. In short, there was every evidence that our victory was as decisive as it was glorious—that the enemy was in disorganized flight, getting back to Virginia as rapidly as his worn out limbs and shattered horse flesh could carry him.

The distance from Gettysburg to the Potomac is fully forty miles, and with the assistance of General French and the old garrison of Harper's Ferry, numbering about five or thousand men, including most of the Maryland regiments, who are understood to be properly posted to check his flight, we have strong hopes of being able to operate on the fleeing rebel column as to send it across the Potomac a demoralized and disorganized mob.

Parties leaving the battle ground on Saturday at noon say the enemy was in full retreat, leaving in our hands many thousand of their killed and wounded. Our men all felt that they had whipped the enemy, and the joy was great. The shouts of victory could be heard for many miles when the enemy retreated, and was kept up to a late hour in the night. A shout in one division was echoed from the next, and so went the rounds of the field, and was renewed as fresh evidences of victory reached them.

On Friday evening a flag of truce arrived from General Lee, proposing in his hypocritical manner a truce of forty-eight hours as a measure of humanity, to afford time to bury the dead and attend to the wounded. It was evident that the enemy must at once retreat, and the proposition was regarded by Gen. Meade as a mere ruse to obtain time to push forward his trains towards the river and secure a line of escape; the proposition was promptly rejected and an advance immediately ordered on the town of Gettysburg. The enemy slowly retired before our cavalry and infantry, and by midnight we were in full possession of the town and the battle-field without opposition.

The horrors of war can be greatly mitigated by that sovereign remedy, Holloway's Ointment, as it will cure any wound, however desperate, if it be well rubbed around the wounded parts, and they be kept thoroughly covered with it. A pot of ointment should be in every man's knapsack. Only 25 cents per pot.

FRENCH MURDER.—A most fiendish murder was committed on the Delaware and Raritan canal on Wednesday of last week. A pedlar was seen to get on board a canal boat at Millstone, to go to Rocky Hill. A farmer who was driving a pair of horses not far off, saw two men on board struggling with the jeweler, and saw the latter thrown overboard. The farmer tied his horses and proceeded to the spot to see what was the matter. He found the dead body of the jeweler in the water, with his throat cut. He went to the lock at Griggstown, and gave the alarm. When the boat arrived it was examined, and the jewelry of the pedlar was found in the hold of the vessel. The men were arrested and confined in the Somerset county jail.

Gen. Delarue, who married the only daughter of Baumarchais, author of the "Marriage of Figaro," has just died, at the age of ninety-six. He was aid-de-camp to General Lafayette, colonel of the Eighth legion of the National Guard, and was by the side of Louis Philippe when Fieschi's infernal machine was fired off. His lieutenant colonel, M. de Mousse, was killed behind him, with Marshal Mortier, Duke de Trevis, and several other persons. In 1848, M. Delarue was general of a brigade in the National Guard, and, although eighty years of age, remained on horseback the whole day on the memorable 24th of February.

The Girard Will case, which has caused so much litigation between the city and the heirs of Girard, came up a short time ago before the Supreme Court, on an appeal from the decision of the Schuylkill County Court, in a suit brought by these heirs to recover some coal lands belonging to the Girard estate, held in trust by the city of Philadelphia for the benefit of the Girard College. The Supreme Court gave its decision a few days since, in favor of the city, reversing the decree of the Schuylkill Co. Court.

In view of several cases of resistance of the enrollment in Newark, a notice was read on Sunday last in all the Catholic churches of that city, by order of Bishop Bayley, advising the people of that denomination, with whom most of the difficulty has arisen, not to make any resistance whatever to the work; that it was the law of the land, and must be obeyed; and that the people should give a ready acquiescence to it, and answer promptly and truthfully all questions.

Maj. Gen. Sigel, who reported himself for any duty which might be assigned to him at this critical moment, has been directed by the Secretary of War to report at Harrisburg to aid General Couch in the defence of Pennsylvania.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says the main reason for the removal of Gen. Hooker from the command of the Army of the Potomac was a radical difference of opinion between him and Gen. Halleck as to the value of Maryland Heights as a military position during the present active operations.

It is said that the main point in the President's reply to the Vallandigham Committee is that they shall agree in writing to support and obey all the laws, and that they shall pledge Vallandigham to do the same, when he shall be allowed to return and remain at liberty.

Gen. Meade, the new leader of the Army of the Potomac, is the grandson of George Meade, of Philadelphia, an eminent Irish-American merchant, whose firm (Meade and Fitzsimmons) contributed in 1781 $10,000 to a fund for the relief of the famishing army of Gen. Washington.

Victoria Balfe, daughter of Balfe, the composer, has petitioned for a declaration of nullity of marriage. She was married in 1860 to Sir John Cramp-ton, once England's representative to this country. Sir John is at present English Ambassador at the Court of Madrid.

A woman was stung to death by bees, at Unity, Columbia county, Ohio, on the 8th ult. Her children had tormented the bees with a stick, and they flew at the mother in such numbers, and stung her so fiercely that she lived only fifteen minutes.

Some persons, said to be Knights of the Golden Circle, broke open the depot, at Huntingdon, Indiana, at about midnight, on Sunday last. They opened two or three boxes of guns and ammunition and distributed it among themselves.

It is certain that the great Tredggar Iron Works of Richmond were destroyed by fire on the 17th ult. All the fine machinery and sixteen cannon, nearly perfect, were lost.

The sum of $32,066 has been forwarded to the Bishop of Boston, who is now in Europe, for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland.

It is said that our postal currency is circulating freely as change in the rebel capital.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.—A few days since, when a car-load of sick and wounded soldiers arrived at the Baltimore depot, Philadelphia, and while waiting for transportation to the hospitals, several little boys came into the cars and gratuitously furnished a number of the brave fellows with fruit, ice, etc. One of the soldiers, a member of Co. B, 154th New York Volunteers, insisted on paying the lads for their most acceptable gifts, but the little fellows most strenuously declined taking one cent. As they turned to leave, the soldier called them back, and said: "My dear boys, if you will take nothing else, won't you accept a soldier's thanks and a soldier's blessing?" These few words were said with such feeling and kindness as to bring tears to the eyes of those who witnessed the pleasing incident.

What two animals had the least juggle in the ark? The fox and the cock, for they only had a brush and a comb between them.
