MARIETTA. PA:

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1864.

When Maj. Gen. Franklin was arrested in the train near Baltimore, he was dressed in citizens clothes, and when the rebels entered the car and asked him who he was be replied, "nobody of any account." The guard passed on a few yards, when a Baltimore lady, (of whom there was quite a number on board) told him the General's rank and name, The guard returned and demanded his papers, which were of course handed over, and the General was taken from the car, he said he could not murch with them as he was disabled, when one of the guard took possession of a passing horse and buggy and put the General in. surrounding it with a guard, the guard, composed of General Owens and two privates. He was driven through the country stopping awhile at Townstown. and at Reistertown, where they arrived at midnight, and immediately bivouacked for the night. The General excusing himself as sick and weary immediately laid down and feigned sleep; soon after them. The General continued to feign the whole three of the guard, were, unmistakably asleep, when he got up and carelessly walked around and coughed aloud, enough to have waked almost any person but a very tired soldier each of the guard lying with his hand on his musket-finding they were, beyond any doubt, asleep, he jumped the fence and made for the direction of Baltimore; after nearly an hour's run he entered; thick woods and in his weakly state sought a place of concealment, where he remained for the balance of the night and all of the next day; he frequently saw from his hiding place, the rebels hunting him. Finally, boot sun-set, nearly famished for water and food, he ventured out and soon saw two men moving toward him with large bundles of hay. He walked up to them and asked what they wanted with hay in the woods; they replied that they had hid their horses from the damd rebels and that they were about giving them some feed. This reply assured the General that he was in the hands of friendshe made himself known and they immediately dropped their hay and conduct ed him to their home where he was most kindly treated. Here he remained secreted until Wednesday night when he arrived at Baltimore. The name of the patrictic Maryland farmer is at present with held for prudent reasons.

THE "GREAT EASTERN" AGAIN. This moneter, about the intended destination of which some curiosity has been excited, will, we understand, says the New York Artisan, shortly leave the Mersey for the Thames. She is at present taking in coals, and by the early part of August will, it is expected, be ready to take her departure. On her arrival at the Thames she will receive a complete overhauling and be fitted with the necessary machinery for laying the Atlantic telegraph cable, for which, as already announced, she has been secured. In the meantime the cable is being manufactured and the operation of laying will be commenced in the spring of the ensuing year.

WHAT IS ASTRAKAN?-Many women the past winter have worn Astrakan, without thinking what it is. Astrakan, as its name indicates, is an Asiatic invention. They couple a black ewe with a black ram. Before the dam has given to the young, she is killed, and the lambs are taken from her womb. Their wool is jet black and of an extreme fineness. It costs very dear; there are Persians whose Astrakan bonnets are worth $100 a piece. This statement is worthy of notice by ladies who have false Astrakan-Astrakan the wool of which is long and dyed.
