Ab, there he is, rapt, for a moment looking at the child showing her shoes with a start he rouses himself and rushes out.

"What, Bill, going so soon to bewail the landlady. Bill pulls his hat down over his eyes with one hand, clutches his old jacket tight over his chest, and answers the words with a sort of grunt.

"He is outside, there is his wife and little one. For a moment the woman looks at him timorously, and half awakes as if she feared what he would do next.

"I will not rise, lest the manhood of my readers should be wounded. Something in Bill's look, however, persuaded her that she was not alone.

"The child from her lap, the old creature gave a look of defiance at the man who stood before her.

"I wish his hat had been off, that I might have seen his face, as I saw it now, pale, chilled, feet wet, his eyes red, his face that he put them in his breast, and buttoned his jacket over them, and held the child close, and went on his way with a heavy heart.

"I had a faint suspicion of what was passing in the man's mind. From that night I was glad that I saw him no more among the frequenters of the 'Fox and Geese'.

"The young man, thus roused, started at the first word, and looked at the man very confused.

"The little shoes, they did it." With a thick voice, as if his heart was in his throat, he kept repeating this. "There was a smile of perplexity on every face, and at length some thoughtless young people began to titter.

"The man in all his embarrassment heard the sound, and looking once at the right of his eyes with a dash, he drew himself up and looked at the audience, the choking went from his throat.

"The writer once lived, opposite a boot shopkeeper the 'Fox and Geese', and with painted attention often watched the doings, and also heard the silyngs of the customers.

"One winter evening, a shoemaker's boy, came with an assortment of children's shoes, and the landlady of the 'Fox and Geese', who had the most marvelous shrill voice, began calling to a little, dirty slave of a negro-girl to bring 'Adelaide'."

"I will continue to receive orders for all kinds of Brandy, Whiskey, Gins, Irish and Scotch Whiskey, Cordials, Bitters, &c.

AFFECTING INCIDENT.—L. B. Willard, Esq., the State Military Agent of Michigan, writing from Nashville, Tenn., to his wife, relates the following affecting incident:

"Last evening, as I was passing by the Post Hospital, my attention was arrested by the singing, in a rather loud tone, of 'Rally Round the Flag, Boys,' by one of the patients inside. While listening to the beautiful music of that popular song, I observed to a nurse standing in the doorway that the person singing must be in a very merry mood and could not be very sick.

"You are mistaken, sir," said he, "the poor fellow engaged in singing that good old song is now grappling with death—has been dying all day. I am his nurse," he continued, "and the scene so affected me that I was obliged to leave the room. He is just about breathing his last." I stepped into the ward, and true enough, the brave man was near his end. His eyes were already fixed in death. He was struggling with all his remaining strength against the grim monster, while at the same time there gushed forth from his patriotic soul incoherently the words, 'Rally round the flag, boys,' which had so often cheered him through his weary march and braced him up when entering the field of blood in defense of his country. Finally he sank away into this death stumber, and I joined his Maker's commandant in marching onward to his eternal better land. The last audible sound that escaped his lips was, 'Rally, boys, rally once again.' As his eyes were closing, some dozen of his fellow-soldiers joined in a solemn yet beautiful and appropriate to the occasion, 'Take it altogether this was one of the most affecting scenes I have ever witnessed in a hospital. I drew tears copiously from near one hundred of us. It recurred to me the large ward which occupies the entire body of the church on Cherry street. The deceased was an Illinoisian, and had been wounded in one of the recent skirmishes."

SATISFIED WITH HIS TERMS.—A certain good-natured old Vermont farmer possessed his constant good nature, let what would turn up.—One day, while the black tongue prevailed in that State one of his men came in bringing the news that one of his red oxen was dead. "Is he?" said the old man; "well, he always was a breechy cuss. Take his hide off and carry it down to Fletcher's; it will bring the cash." An hour or so afterward, the man came back with the news that the hide and his mate were both dead. "I ask them," said the old man, "to save each other. I never expected to get it. It is lucky that it ain't the brindle. Take the hide down to Fletcher's; they will bring the cash." After the lapse of another hour, the man came back to tell him that the high brindle was dead. "Is he?" said the old man; "well, he was a very old ox. Take off his hide and send it down to Fletcher's; it is worth cash, and will bring more than two of the others." Hereupon his wife, who was a very pious soul, taking upon herself the office of Eliph, reminded her husband very severely, and asked him if he was not aware that his loss was a judgment upon him for his wickedness. "Is it?" said the old fellow; "well, if they will take the judgement in 'cattle,' it is the easiest way I can pay it."

CROWDING A Bachelor.—What did you, come here after? Inquired Miss Susan Diaper, of a bachelor friend, who made her a call when the rest of the people were gone out.

"I came to borrow some matches," he meekly replied.

"Matches! that's a likely story. Why don't you make a match? I know what you came for," exclaimed the delighted Miss Diaper, as she crowded the old bachelor almost to death, but you shan't without you are the strongest, and the Lord knows you are!"

A preacher of small intellect, depending more on the power of a sanctimonious long face for a passport than on any particular quality of his mind, was one day engaged to preach at a small town where he was not popular.

"I call every man in town to the principle who condemns the man who does not believe exactly what he does, and who is full of doubts and questions, all those who do not think things as I think."

"The young man, thus roused, started at the first word, and looked at the man very confused.

"The little shoes, they did it." With a thick voice, as if his heart was in his throat, he kept repeating this. "There was a smile of perplexity on every face, and at length some thoughtless young people began to titter.
