Young Grimes.

Old Grimes is dead—that good old man,

We ne'er shall see him more;

But he has left a son who bears

The name that old Grimes bore.

He wears a coat of latest cut,

His hat is new and gay;

He cannot bear to view distress,

So turns from it away.

His pants are gaiters—fitting snug

Over patent leather shoes;

His hair is by a barber curled—

He smokes cigars and chews.

A chain of massive gold is borne

Above his flashy vest;

His clothes are better every day

Than were old Grimes' best.

In Fashion's court he constant walks,

Where he delight doth shed;

His hands are white and very soft,

But softer is his head.

His six feet tall—no post more straight—

His teeth are pearly white;

In habits he is sometimes loose,

And sometimes very tight.

His manner is of sweetest grace,

His voice of softest tone;

His diamond pin's the very one

That old Grimes used to own.

His dyed moustache adorn his face,

His neck a scarf of blue;

He sometimes goes to church for chance,

And sleeps in Grimes' pew.

He sports the fastest "cab" in town,

Is always quick to bet;

He never knows who's President,

But thinks "Old Tip's in yet."

He has drunk wines of every kind,

And liquors cold and hot;

Young Grimes, in short, is just the sort

Of man—old Grimes was not.

Household Cares.

Mrs. Kirkland has very truly said that woman is never really and healthily happy without household cares. But to perform housework is too frequently considered degrading. Even where the mother, in obedience to the traditions of her youth, condescends to labor occasionally, the daughters are frequently brought up in perfect idleness, take no bodily exercise except that of walking in fine weather, or riding in cushioned carriages, or dancing at a party. Those, in short, who can afford servants, cannot be mean themselves, as they think, by domestic labors. The result is, too frequently, that ladies of this class lose what little health they started life with, becoming feeble in just about the proportion as they become fashionable. In this neglect of household cares, American ladies stand alone. A German lady, no matter how elevated her rank, never forgets that domestic labors conduce to the health of mind and body alike. An English lady, whatever may be her position in society, does not neglect the affairs of her household, and, even though she has a housekeeper, devotes a portion of her time to this, her true and happiest sphere. A contrary life to this results in a lassitude of mind often as fatal to health as the neglect of bodily exercise.

The wife who leaves her household cares to her domestics, generally pays the penalty which has been affixed to idleness Intemperance.

A man may lose his money, his honor may be destroyed by fire, his health may give way. But all these things may be restored to him, and even like patient Job, a double portion may be given him. But the poor drunkard has no such flattering prospects before him.

His character is gone—his health shattered—his purse empty, his family wretched, and not a redeeming trait in his character to lift him back in the confidence and esteem of those who once respected him. Who is responsible for such mercy? 100,000 drunkards die annually, who is it that sends such a mighty army to a dishonored grave? and causes the groans and screams of wives and children to ascend Heavenward?

Who is it that fills our prisons—our hospitals—our houses of refuge? Who is it that doubles our taxes, perverts the morale, disturbs the peace of community? We answer the Rumseller has a great deal to do in this wretched business. In justification of their conduct may say we don't sell to drunkards.

No, no, our house is a respectable one—our customers are the elite of the town.

These rumsellers are doing more to perpetuate drunkenness than those who sell to drunkards only, because as soon as one poor drunkard falls, here comes one from these respectable houses to take his place. If rumsellers were agreed to sell liquors to none but the intemperate in a very short time this terrible scourge would be entirely removed. Moderate drinking we beg of you to cease drinking. A little effort on your part would soon send a thrill of joy to many bleeding hearts. As patriot lovers of your country, here you have a glorious oppor-portunity of contributing largely to the happiness of the community. Dr. Smith says: "The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals, and threatening destruction; and all attempts to regulate it will not only prove abortive, but aggravate the evil. No there must be no more efforts to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated—not a root must be left behind; for until this be done, all classes must continue exposed to become the victims of strong drink; and the woe in the text must abide.

Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him."

Come then, friends of the Temperance cause, let us buckle on more tightly than ever the weapons of a good warfare, cry aloud and spare not. Our time is short, our day is drawing to a close,

"Whatever our hands find to do, do it with all our might." And if we should only be successful in shutting up one rum shop or saving one poor drunkard from a drunkard's grave or convincing one moderate drinker of his danger, and thus preventing him from going into the drunkard's army, if we should by our labor accomplish but this, we can say our life has not been altogether in vain. It will be a greater victory than "He that taketh a city." Go on in your good work, and you shall have the prayers of the good to encourage you; and many yet unborn may rise up and call you blessed. "Then with Christ in the heart, the hope of glory we can say when the hour of our departure comes" we have fought the good fight, we have Important to Young Men and Teachers.

Every young man, whatever may be his future calling in life, will find a thorough and practical business education his greatest aid to success. Such a course may be had by all, as the expense and time necessary for a thorough preparation can readily be spared from the earnings of every industrious youth in the country. Three months only are necessary for a preparation that shall introduce any farmer's son, teacher or mechanic, into a business position that shall bring him a good salary, and that may lead him on to a business success.

At Philadelphia, Pa., a system of instruction has been introduced into J. C.

Mumford's Business and Telegraph

College that must be thoroughly practi-
