The praises of Gen. Meade, for his skill and success at Gettysburg, were extravagant. The complaints against him for suffering Gen. Lee to escape from Williamsport were unreasonable and almost denunciatory. Now, more rational views begin to prevail. The position of Gen. Lee at Williamsport was such that if assailed, even by double his numbers, he might, and probably would, have made it another Fredericksburg affair. He was well posted on elevated ground, and being in a bend of the Potomac river, both his wings were thoroughly protected; and on his front, that is when he faced back toward our army, he was fortified, somewhat rudely, but very strongly. For Gen. Meade to have brought on a battle any day before Monday (13th.) would have been extremely hazardous. On that day, Lee having sent one third of his men (20,000) across the river, on our side. together with all his heavy artillery, he might have been badly beaten, and would have been if only Meade had known the situation. We attribute the escape of Lee to no culpable defect on the part of Meade, but rather to the will of Providence. That Providence we trust, intends a benefit to us, and we wish to obtain it by wisdom and energy.

The rebel army is evidently not demoralized. Lee is in no haste to seek Richmond. The wheat harvest is just reaped where he is. Grain and forage are plenty. He drove thousands of cattle out of Pennsylvania and Maryland. He is hence likely to move only as he is forced to move, and to do that as slowly as possible, consistent with safety. He wishes time to gather the wheat and send it before him; and he will tarry for the corn too, if we permit him] about 1,500. This privilege, however, is not likely to be granted. Last reports spoke of a portion of his army being already at Culpepper. with great slaughter. The residue was still at Winchester, and thence advanced toward Strasburg.

THE REPORT of Gen. Rosecrans' advance. having reached Rome, Ga, proves to have been incorrect. He had not, at last reliable information, crossed the Tennessee river. It was still uncertain whether he would try to take Chattanooga, and then make leading citizens of Jackson and surrounding counthe conquest of East Tennessee, or whether try implored him to take some action by which Mississippi may be restored to the Union. Both he would move South through Alabama the army and people of that section are comand coöperate with Grant, the latter mov-ing East from Vishahung The family for peace They staked their all on Vicksburg, and after i

At the call of his country, in the Fall of 1862, he left family and friends to de battle for liberty. True to her cause, as a good soldier, he The Presbyterian Board of Publication. was always at his post, in the camp, on picket, and amidst the din of battle. He fought at Port Gibson, and fell at Raymond, a sacrifice on the altar of, his country. In one of his letters, when at Camp Yates, he said : "I am surrounded by all kinds of wickedness, but I have set my heart against them all." On hearing of the death of his infant daughter, soon after leaving home, he said : "I am amongst strangers—no one to sympathize with me; but there is One above all others, that well deserves the name of Friend." He was a kind father and loving husband. He leaves a wife and two children, and a large circle of friends, to mourn their loss. May thy dust rest in peace

HOOFLAND'S CERMAN BITTERS: From J. Newton Brown, D.D., Editor of the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. Although not disposed to favor of recommend Patent Medicines in general, through distrust of their ingredients and effects; I yet know of ne sufficient reason why a man may not testify to the benefit he believes himself to have received from any simple preparation, in the bope that he may have contribute to the benefit of others. I do this the more readily in regard to Hoofmad's German Bitters; prepared by Dr.C. M. Jackson, of this, city, because i was prejudiced against them for many years, under the impression, that they were chiefly an alcoholic mixturs; I am indebied to my friend Robert Shoemaker, Eaq, for the removal of this prejudice by proper tests, and for enconing three debility. The use of three bottles of these Bitters, at the beginning of the present year, was followed by evident reliof, and restoration to a degree of bodily and mental vigor which T had not felf for six months before, and had althoust despaired of regaining. I therefore thank God and my friend for directing me 23, 1861.
