THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, February, 1864. Reprint of Leonard Scott & Co., New York. Pittsburgh: J. P. Miner.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for April has been published. The contents are: 1. Theodore Parker; 2. Shakeriana; 3. The Sanitary Commission; 4. St. Louis and Louisville; 5. The Navy of the United States; 6. The Future Supply of Cotton; 7. Carl Ritter; 8. Royal Work in Missouri; 9. West Point; 10. General McClellan's Report; 11. Critical Notices.

THE FOLLOWING books are also on our table, from the same Publication Committee, which we can scarcely call any thing unusual or improbable. It is, however, a very readable book, and presents, under the guise of fiction, the sufferings which can with difficulty be exaggerated in the history of Eastern Tennessee.

THE CANIBAL ISLANDS; OR, FIJI AND ITS PEOPLE. Pp. 300. ... of the Cannibal Islands, or, Fiji and its people. A good book for the children. Also the following Tracts:

Fire-side Reading.

Guy's Temptation. "Hurrah for Mr. Phipps!" was the cry that rose from a group of boys clustered around the Glenville school house.

The Anchor of Hope. A vessel was about leaving Boston for a port in the Mediterranean. Though supplied with the usual number of anchors, the captain ordered beside one of a smaller size.

A Church at Mt. Lebanon. On one of the lofty peaks of Mt. Lebanon, Syria, that goodly mountain, so often alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, there is a little village called Mt. Lebanon.

Flaxy was right; had the best uniform; was the taller. Guy, though young, was a universal favorite; had a brother in the army who had taught him to "train"; would be the smartest officer.

school, but their work had been greater in flattery Guy's vanity, rousing his passion, and fostering a little spirit of self-righteousness.

Mr. Phipps quietly observant of the progress of things in the school, began to fear the celebration must be omitted, as involving more evil than good.

At last the final trial was postponed until the following Monday, and the boys separated in great excitement.

"I don't care," soliloquized Guy, on his homeward way. "I don't see why I shouldn't take Tom's advice, and be captain of the boys' brigade, and let the others go."

"But all the big boys will be angry with me, mother. They want me to be obliging, they say—a little flabby needn't be put down without spirit," said Guy, impudently.

"And if he does not show spirit? if he does give in, what then?" "Why, then, I shall be called a sneak—that's all!" said Guy, sharply, just restraining himself from a violent kick at the foot of the bed.

"I might have expected to find something like that," and then the boy wiped away a few rebellious tears. Like the rest of the boys, Guy found being good was often uphill work.

"Tell you what, boys," was Tom Rich's salutation, as the scholars thronged into the playground on the next Monday; "we're going to elect our captain to-day, say."

"Hold on, boys!" cried Guy, though his cheeks tingled. "I'm not dead yet. I'm not mean, but it's no way to celebrate Washington's Birthday by a fuss, or by dividing our brigade. We ought to be united that day, surely. I move Aleck Turner be captain—he's just the one, so tall and soldierly."

"That was neat in little Guy," said Tom Rich, pulling Flaxy back aside. "Hum!" said the latter, whistling.

"That's about the way," said Tom, "to come of what How, calling being pious? Tell you what, it would not be bad if the rest of us had some of that same religion."

"And Flaxy trusted his hands deeper into his pockets, and nodded emphatic assent—'Congratulation!'" against the heavy waves of temptation that shall roll upon the soul? The majestic man, a brute, bold firm against the onslaught; but never shall thy vessel reach the heavenly port with no other security than thy virtuous life. Morality is good, but it is not sufficient.

Young man, bound on an untrodden voyage, secure the anchor of a good hope, ere you sail farther. Soon shall you pass through the narrow straits of death, and spread your canvass upon the shoreless ocean of eternity. Then, if unsecured, too late will you appeal to the Great Master.

Did you ever see an engine try to start a train of cars? How it pulled and ground and rattled, just as if the iron horse had hardly started, and then it would ponderous load!

and at last they drove him, sad and disheartened, away from his home. But when the missionary went there, he returned, for he had a brother to sympathize with and encourage him. He was uniformly kind to those who hated and injured him, and by degrees their hearts became softened toward him; they began to gather around him and seemed sorry for the ill feeling they had formerly manifested, and for all the trouble they had caused him.

rows, they can be filled by carefully taking plants from the crowded places and transplanting them. Hoe often and weed thoroughly. The Early Horn Carrot is the best.

Try the Dwarf Parsnips—These who find it too much trouble to furnish the tall growing peas with brush or other support, should try some of the dwarfs, of which there are several varieties. They grow from eight to eighteen inches high, and are quite desirable for small gardens.
