New flight training program at local airport

A new Cessna Pilot Center, has opened at the E-Town/Marietta Airport.

Licensee for the new Cessna Pilot Center is Smith Aviation.

The Cessna Integrated Flight Training System utilized by Smith Aviation brings flight training down to its simplest form.

Devised by Cessna Aircraft Company after several years of study and extensive testing, the system features a programmed learning concept which combines ground school and flight training--taught separately by most flight schools--into an integrated curriculum.

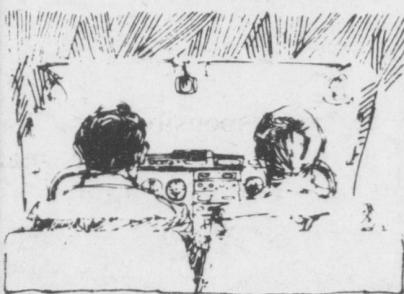

"The program is set up," said Smith Aviation Manager Frank Smith, "so the student knows in advance exactly what each flight will consist of, its objectives, what he's expected to know, and what he is to prepare for. It's very effective."

He noted that more than 96 per cent of all CPC students who have taken the required written examinations to qualify for a private pilot's license have passed on the first attempt.

"Test scores," Smith said, "generally have been in the 80's and 90's." A score of 70 or better is required to make the student eligible to take the flight check to qualify for licensing.

The new Cessna Pilot Center utilizes, as its basic training aircraft, the Cessna Model 150 in which 45 per cent of all flight training in North America is conducted.
