

Three months ago, few people had ever heard of Darvin Boyd. Today, a lot of people think he should be our next Congressman.

In a very short time, Darvin Boyd has gained the respect and support of thousands of people all over the 16th Congressional District. He has been shaking hands, meeting people individually and in groups, sharing his convictions about America and America's political process.

He has personally carried his message from factory floors to corporate boardrooms, from farmers' fields to city streets. He has been campaigning long days and long nights since February 12th, the day he resigned his staff position in Harrisburg to devote full-time to taking his message to the voters of the district.

He believes in the American political system. Torn and battered though it may sometimes appear, he believes it is still the best political system in the world. But to make it work, people must work. Especially people in government.

After he is elected, Darvin will work just as hard on the job as he did to earn the right to represent you in Congress.

What kind of Congressman will Darvin Boyd be? Certainly, he will work hard. Everything about him - the way he was brought up, the way he has lived and actually challenged life, his youth, his energy, enthusiasm, vigor and health - all proclaim a willingness to work, an eagerness to work, a tremendous capacity for work.

As your Congressman, Darvin Boyd has promised to work for you - to the very limit of his capacities. He has promised to uphold the high private and public moral standards you have a right to expect from your elected officials. He has promised to serve you with enthusiasm and vigor. He has promised accessibility, integrity and candor.

These are all promises he can and will keep. They are promises to each and every one of us here in the 16th

Congressional District. They are not promises to political factions or pressure groups. Although he has led a life of public service for the past decade, Darvin Boyd has remained free of entanglements with special interest groups, in and out of politics.

Darvin Boyd is the kind of man we need in Washington. If you've met him, you already know that. If you haven't met him, we hope you'll take the time to read here about his work and accomplishments. It's a lot of reading. Because, although he's a young man, there's a lot to say about Darvin Boyd. He's accomplished a great deal.

As your Congressman, he will accomplish even more. For the country. For mankind. For you.

We hope you'll vote for Darvin Boyd in the Republican primary, Tuesday, April 27.

Boyd for Congress Committee John R. Gibbel, Chairman
