J. Prowell [con't.]

When Glen was going to an auction, he'd call Jim and say, 'how about coming along and towing one home.' Soon Jim was towing his own cars home.

Old car restorers find their raw materials in backyards, junkyards, old barns and auctions. Once a car has been purchased, parts have to be scavenged. A lot of grinding and sanding is necessary.

Jim and his family work for a year or two to rebuild each car.

Jim says, "Too many parents today hand their kid a new car. I think kids appreciate a car more if they work on it themselves."

Jim, who has no training in car repair, is taking adult-education courses at Mount Joy Vo-tech to polish up his skills. To help support his hobby, he casts custom aluminum 'license' plates for other car buffs.
