

PP&L opens bicentennial home in Mt. Joy-Manheim area

W. R. Shellenburger, Mr. and Mrs. David Heisey, Brent Shunk and Robert Fish at ribbon-cutting ceremony for PP&L's new energy-efficient house.

PA Power & Light Company's bicentennial home in the Manheim-Mount Joy area was opened last Friday with a ribbon-cutting attended by local officials and representatives from the Company's Lancaster Division headquarters.

Participating in the 10:30 a.m. ceremony were Jean Mowery, Lancaster County Commissioner; W. Robert Shellenberger, secretary, Rapho Township Board of Supervisors, and David Heisey, builder-owner. Representing PP&L were Brent Shunk, vice president-Lancaster Division, Robert Fish and John Dobosh, residential consultants who worked with the builder on this project.

The newly-built, energy efficient house was open to the public beginning last Saturday. It incorporates the latest concepts in efficient use of energy in the areas of greatest energy use—heating, cooling, and water heating, said Shunk.

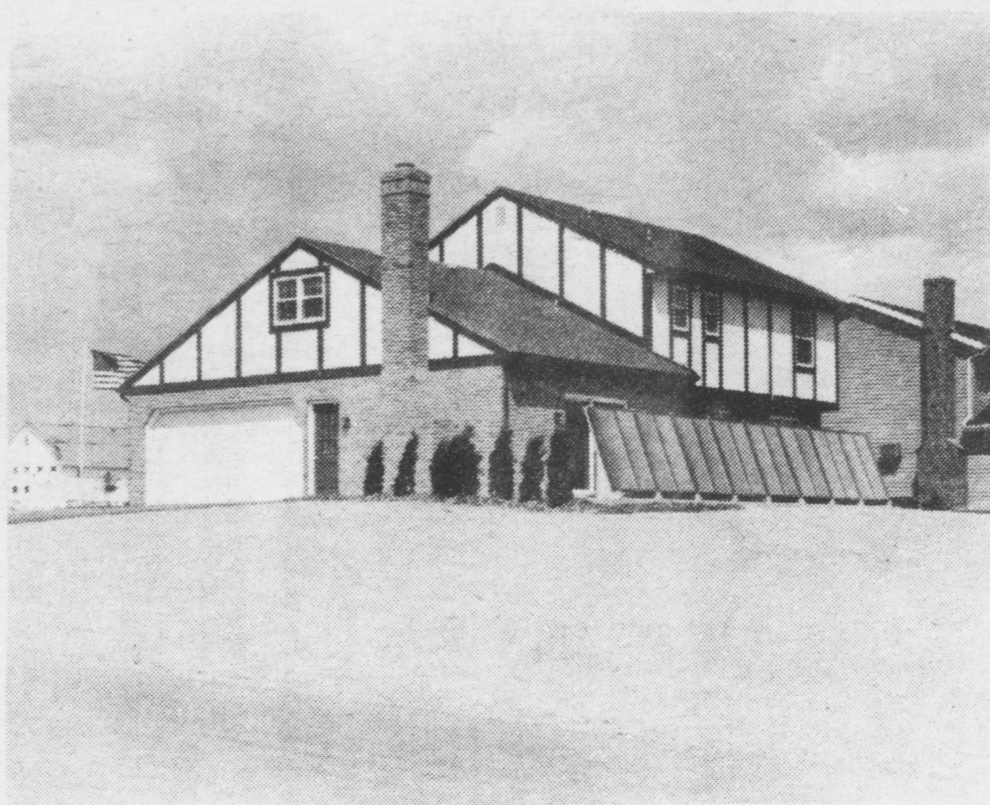

Visitors can find the house by following "Bicentennial Home" signs from the Manheim-Mount Joy exit of Route 283 for one mile along Strickler Road. David G. Heisey, Inc., of Elizabethtown built the home in Pleasant View Estates. PP&L cooperated in some of the experimental features.

The house will be open to the public every Saturday and Sunday, now through August, excluding Memorial Day and July Fourth weekends. Builder representatives and PP&L residential consultants will be on hand to explain the workings of the home's energy saving features.

Open house hours are 1 to 5 p.m. Tours are available at other times for clubs and community organizations. Interested groups should contact Robert Fish, PP&L bicentennial home coordinator in Lancaster at 397-6181, ext. 339.

This home is one of five bicentennial homes which will be open for public inspection this summer throughout PP&L's service area.

New energy-efficient house can be heated for $200 a year.
