...Strike continued

At a Thursday night bargaining session, teachers won back the $4,400 in salaries, but accepted a roughly equal loss in salary protection insurance.

The new contract will not become final until the school board votes approval at its next scheduled meeting, November 18.

Under the agreement:

Most teachers will get a $900 raise this year and a $1000 raise next year.

Starting teachers will get $8,200 this year. Starting teachers who are hired next year will get $8,700. The old salary was $7,500.

Teachers with 1 year of experience will get $8,800 this year. The old salary was $8,400.

Teachers will also get improved medical insurance and retirement benefits.

No non-economic items are included in the package.

The agreement will not pinch this year's school budget, board spokesmen say. The effect on next year's milage, if any, will depend on changes in state funding regulations.
