CHILDREN'S YEARS
by Mary Rose Turnpaugh

Oh, for the days when kiddie cars,
Trains and trucks and blocks and bars
Are put away in piles so neat.

Oh, for the days when the wash is done;
When the battle of keeping clean diapers
is won;
When the housework once finished stays done all day through—
Oh, for the hours with nothing to do!

Oh, for the days that aren't filled with skinned knees,
Bruises and bumps and falls out of trees,
Chicken pox, measles, colds and sore throats,
Cough syrup, aspirin, fevers to note.

When can the bath water stay in the tub
So I can get in without needing a sub?
When can I say that it's time now for bed
And have them remember they're already fed?

Oh, for the days when the questions will cease;
When the whys are all answered, their minds
now at peace.

Oh, for the days when I no longer hear
"Mommy, I need this or that, Mom, come here!"

Oh, for the days when there's no tears to dry,
No little crises to share with a sigh;
No little arms reaching up for a hug,
No little heads on my shoulder so snug.

Oh, for the days that are coming too fast
When all of these wonders belong to the past,
And I eagerly wait for a small voice to say,
"Hi, Grandma, I love you, we want you to play."
