

“Poinsettia” in a log

Chet Loucks and his son Chuck were cutting driftwood along the banks of the Susquehanna when they noticed red sawdust coming from the log they were sawing. In the center of the log was a bright red pattern. Chuck cut a section from the log and varnished it (see photo above). The pattern reminds Mrs. Loucks of a poinsettia. She is using the log-section to decorate her Marietta home. The red stain runs the whole length of the log.
