

Local ladies look out for stray beasts

by Betty Lutze

Do you know that Vera Kirvinske of Bainbridge and Betty Lutze of Marietta, R.D. both have some things in common?

Both are retired school teachers.

Both are friends.

Both go to the same church.

Both love animals and can't bear to see them suffer.

On Thursday, when the snow was swirling around, they were both on separate errands (neither knowing the whereabouts of the other, incidentally!)

Betty happened to be in the Millersville area and stopped at John Herr's store. A little, white, lost dog was rushing up to all the shoppers, noticeable lost and without a collar. If it would be out all night, it would obviously freeze.

This happened at about 3 p.m. At 8 p.m., it bothered Betty so much that she called John Herr's store, asked for the manager and told him what was bothering her and would he check and if the little "poodle looking" doggie was still there, call the police so it could be taken to the shelter. The manager appreciated her concern, said he would check it out.

Would you believe that at about the same time, Vera was going down Route 441 toward the Market-Kart; there was one lonely cow in the field with a little calf. This bothered her so much that she had her husband, George, drive into the farm where she was told their son was on his way to lead "Mama" and her new born to the barn!

Do you know what else they have in common? Both George and Frank think they are a little "Kooky" at times!

Kraybill students raise money to dig a well in African nation

Students and teachers at Kraybill Mennite School decided not to have a gift exchange at Christmas time this year. Instead they decided to give money to help villagers in the central African country of Chad dig wells for drinking and irrigation purposes. This project receives technical assistance through Mennite Central Committee.

The students and staff were addressed by Ray Brubaker at a kick-off assembly, December 10. Mr. Brubaker is in charge of MCC development and self-help projects in Africa.

He had returned from a recent visit to Chad and several other African countries. He graphically presented the needs by means of filmstrip and artifax.

Chad is one of the central African countries which experienced a severe drought that was much in world news several years ago. Although rain has come to some of the area, adequate water supplies for drinking, cattle, and crops are still not available. Many persons in the outlying villages need to be abandoned because the sides of the wells cave in.

MCC funds provide cement for lining the wells so they will remain in service over extended periods of time. About $100 will provide the labor and cement needed to complete a well.

The response of the students to this project was overwhelming. A total of $481.40 was brought in by students for this project.

Each of the teachers had a creative visual display which helped the students see the progress they were making. The students not only experienced the joy of giving to persons in need but also became better informed about their neighbors living in the central African country of Chad.

These Kraybill students built a model of the African town which will be getting a new well, thanks to the students' efforts.
