Sewer plant vs. farmland battle

Representatives of a Mount Joy Township citizens association charged Wednesday that a high-level federal environmental protection official has arbitrarily scrapped a plan to save two to three square miles of prime farmland from the threat of development.

The group, known simply as "Concerned Citizens" appealed to Lancaster County Commissioners for support in efforts to investigate the official's decision. They said they also were consulting with Lancaster's state and federal legislators.

According to Mrs. Donald Yoder, Greene Jones, regional director of water quality control planned for the EPA, "appeared out of the blue" last week to throw out a plan that would have significantly reduced the size of a proposed sewer project in the West Donegal-Mount Joy Township area.

The plan, Mrs. Yoder said, had been devised over the course of a year by the Concerned Citizens, state environmental planners and members of the federal EPA staff. It would have prevented installation of sewers, and thus the potential for large-scale building development, she said, for some 1,200-1,800 acres of farmland.

Mrs. Yoder said the Concerned Citizens were appalled at the apparently arbitrary decision by Jones and wanted an investigation of his reasons for recommending a full-scale sewer project for Mount Joy Township.

She said the group was now consulting with state Sen. Richard Snyder, U.S. Rep. Robert Walker, and other legislators to obtain a reversal of the decision. She asked the commissioners for their support in requesting an investigation by the state legislature.

The commissioners told the group that they would take no immediate action until they spoke with county planning officials. If the group's actions were in line with county planning policy, they indicated, they would provide a letter of introduction to state legislators with whom the citizens want to speak.
