

Front Street paving plan gets underway

Marietta Borough Council reviewed plans for street construction at the regular monthly meeting.

James Sanchez, a borough engineer, presented an outline for the first phase of the street reconstruction project, which will include resurfacing a quarter mile of Front Street along with Longenecker Avenue and Mulberry St. The plans were needed to file an application for federal funding.

Federal funds and liquid fuel monies will be used to complete the project. Fuel tax monies must be used for street repair.

Council voted to apply for federal community development program funds, which would be used for the restoration of the old Zion Church on Waterford Avenue.

The Marietta Restoration Associates will be asked to co-sponsor the restoration project.

Accessories for the new police cruiser, which will be arriving soon, were approved. Total cost of the cruiser is $5,022.50. The present cruiser will be used for secondary jobs.

Council was informed that the Department of Community Affairs approved an allocation of $5,800 for improvements to War Memorial Park. The Lancaster County Parks Board will oversee the project, which includes some re-wiring and the building of a new pavilion at the park. CETA employees will perform the labor.

Council agreed to sell a lot located at Prospect Street and Cherry Alley to an adjoining property owner for $500.

The suspension of part-time police officer Jay Roberts modified by council. The suspension will be lifted Jan. 17.

The resignation of Paul Raber as zoning officer was accepted. Albert Huck was appointed to fill that post.

In other business, the council:

—Authorized Oliver Overlander, president, and Margaret Booth, borough secretary, to transfer borough funds.

—Set the 1978 tax collector's fee at $100.

—Resolved that all new sewer lines be connected to existing facilities.

—Assured developers of the Fairfax Apartment project that the new building permit was issued on June 1 of last year.

—Explored the possibility of amending the flood plane zoning act.

Fuel bills up 38% this winter

Customers of PA Power & Light Company are experiencing colder than normal weather conditions this heating season and for those with electric heat it can only mean higher electric bills.

An indicator of energy used for space heating is the degree day. The more degree days in a week or month, the more heat required to keep your home comfortable.

This heating season, which began last Sept. 1, is running about 38 per cent more degree days than the same period last year. Even if your life style hasn't changed from last year the colder weather means you're using about 38 per cent more energy.

So the bills you have been receiving these past few months and those you get in the coming months may be higher than the ones you received last year partially because of the colder weather. The effects of the holiday season, higher rates and an increase in fuel costs have also had their impact on the size of your electric bill.

To help you spread the effect of greater energy use during the winter heating season over a longer period PP&L offers a budget plan for residential heating customers. If you are interested in the budget plan call the PP&L Customer Service Office for more information.
