

Want to dig up your roots?

A short course on Genealogy will be offered by the Social Science program at Penn State-Capitol Campus beginning April 2, 1977.

The course is for beginners as well as those who have done work in genealogy and will introduce to the students the many sources and records available. Helpful hints, suggestions and addresses, explanations and assistance in using and finding the kind of sources needed, how to and where to do research in European countries, and much more will be presented.

Mr. John W. Heisey, a graduate of the University of Maryland and presently a graduate student at Penn State, will be the course instructor. Mr. Heisey is a former librarian and director of research at the Historical Society of York County and has served as an instructor of police science, local history and advanced genealogy at York College. He is the author of a Heisey family history, a booklet on "York County in the American Revolution," and a soon-to-be-published book on the professional coverlet weavers of nineteenth century America.

The course will be held April 2 to June 4, 1977 from 10 a.m. to 12 noon on campus. The fee for the course is $20 which includes all educational materials.
