Warning: Don't hunt from cars; watch out for deer running onto roads

Deer hunters are warned that Game Commission agents will be cracking down on people who hunt from cars.

Not only is shooting out of your vehicle's window forbidden, but looking for deer in a car is also frowned upon. Last year very cold weather led a number of hunters to ride around the woods in comfort, and jump out to shoot when they spotted game.

The Game Commission feels that "road hunting" is not very sporting, and they won't tolerate it, they say. In fact, they will prosecute.

The Commission would also like to remind hunters that almost all animals besides deer are off limits during deer season. The exceptions are certain migratory game birds and, during the day, raccoons.

The reason for this, they say, is that too many hunters were shooting extra deer over their limit, using other game as an excuse to be out with guns.

For motorists: watch for deer. More deer will be killed in the next few weeks than in the rest of the year combined. If you were running away from men trying to shoot you, you probably wouldn't think to look before you ran across a road, either, and you're a lot smarter than a deer.
