Geronimo! was investigated by Pack 136

Den 4 scouts of pack 136 recently wrote essays on the Apache Indians and their leader, Geronimo.

The Apaches live in the Southwest. Before the white man came, they were hunting and gathering nomads. The Apaches raided the Pueblo tribes, the Spanish, and finally made war on the American

The Apaches' most famous leader was Geronimo. Geronimo led the Apaches from the reservation where the government had interned them (they didn't like it there and felt they had been unfairly treated). Geronimo and his followers roamed the Southwest for over twenty years, raiding and killing. They were finally tracked down by an Apache scout working for the Army.

Geronimo was born in Arizona around 1827. He became a chief of the tribe in 1846.

Geronimo's family was wiped out in a massacre by the Army, and he refused to surrender to whites after that. Captured, he was sent to the San Carlos reservation in 1880, but escaped to the Sierra Madre mountains of Mexico in 1882 and commenced a reign of terror in Arizona and New Mexico. He was finally caught again in 1906 by two thousand troops. He escaped again, was caught again, and finally died on February 17, 1909, in Fort Pack 136 also held a meeting at Seiler school. Awards were presented by cubmaster Robert W. Mark to Keith Penkunas, Steve and John Ginder, Robert Eichler, David Linton, David Zuschleg, Tony Oxford, Lester Dimeler, James Espinto, and Mike Lehman. There was a visit from Santa Claus at the home of Mary Littlefield, attended by Robert Mark, Loretta Dimeler, Myron Weber.

How to store chocolate

Did you get ten pounds of chocolate for Christmas and don't want to eat it all at once? Here's how to store the stuff.

Chocolate stores well because the cocoa butter in it is a stable fat (cocoa butter is also the ingredient that "melts in your mouth.")

At cooler room temperatures, chocolate won't go rancid, but higher temperatures will melt the fat and make it rise to the surface of your Hershey bars. This is called "bloom." It doesn't mean the chocolate is bad — it just won't taste quite as good.

To make chocolate last, keep it dry; don't refrigerate it; and don't let it get hot. 60 to 70 degrees is just right, as is 50% humidity.
